A ministerial crisis takes place in the Assembly on the 7th. The Government, in committee of Ways and Means, asked for a sum to defray the expenses of the Governor's establishment. Mr. Eagar proposed an amendment affirming that the financial condition of the country was unsatisfactory. The debate was of unusual length, extending over seven evenings. Subsequently, upon the committee dividing, the amendment was negatived by 27 to 26, but on the original motion being put the numbers were equal, 27 on each side, and the Chairman gave his casting vote with the noes. On the following day the Cowper Ministry tendered their resignations, and Mr. W. Forster was sent for by the Governor, but was unsuccessful in his endeavours to form a Ministry. On the 20th, it was announced in the Assembly that Mr. Martin had formed a new Ministry, selecting for his colleagues—Messrs. W. Forster, Eagar, Wilson, Holroyd, and Faucett. The Assembly was adjourned for five weeks to allow time for re-election of the Ministers.

The new Baptist chapel, Castlereagh-street, opened for divine service.

The year closes in deep sorrow owing to the unexpected deaths of Mr. C. J. Fairfax, from effects of a fall from a horse; and the Rev. G. W. Richardson, by drowning.

About a twelvemonth since, when disaster everywhere overtook the Union arms in America, a young lady, scarce nineteen, just from an academy, conceived the idea that she was destined by Providence to lead the Federal armies to victory. It was at first thought by her parents—a highly respectable family in Willoughby-street, New York—that her mind was weakened simply by reading continual accounts of the rival wars, and they treated her as a sick child. This only had the effect of making her more demonstrative, and her enthusiastic declaration and apparent sincerity gave the family great anxiety. At length she succeeded in making her escape. This was last April. She was mourned as lost by her parents. But it was not so. The infatuated girl, finding no sympathy among her friends, resolved to enter the army, disguised as a drummer-boy, dreaming that her destiny would be worked out by such a mode. She joined the drum corps of a Michigan regiment at Detroit, her sex known only to herself, and succeeded in getting with her regiment to the army of the Cumberland. How the poor girl survived the hardships of the Kentucky campaign, where strong men fell in numbers, must for ever remain a mystery. The regiment to which she was attached had a place in the division of the gallant Van Cleve, and during the late bloody battle the fair girl fell, pierced in the left side with a minié ball, and when borne to the surgeon's tent her sex was discovered. She was told by the surgeon that her wound was mortal, and advised to give her name, that her family might be informed of her fate. This she finally, though reluctantly, consented to do, and the colonel of the regiment became interested in her behalf, and prevailed upon her to let him send a despatch to her father. Here, then, is a short incident of the war which might read like romance. But to the unhappy family who are now bowed down by grief romance loses its attraction, and the sad history will be a family record for generations to come.

It is related that during her last stay at Gotha, Queen Victoria, in conversing with the King of Prussia, who was paying her a visit, spoke to him, among others, of Professor Virchow, and of the great esteem in which his physiological works were held in England. A few days after the king met the professor in a promenade. Accosting him, he said to him, "The Queen of England has heard of you. I am proud of having at the University of Berlin professors so celebrated; only it is a pity that you concern yourself with politics, and that you vote with the Democrats." M. Virchow immediately replied, "Sire, what you tell me places me in a situation similar to that of the French artilleryman, in the French campaign of 1792. That artilleryman had been made prisoner, after defending himself heroically, and King Frederick William said to him, 'You are a brave soldier; only it is a pity that you are fighting for such a bad cause.' 'Citizen William,' replied the Republican volunteer, 'let us speak of something else; we shall never agree on that subject.'"

INSOLVENCY COURT.

WEDNESDAY.

BEFORE the Chief Commissioner.

In the estate of Denis M'Keogh, an adjourned second meeting. One debt was proved, and the meeting adjourned. The third meeting in this estate was postponed; the official assignee to file his report within a week.

In the estate of Charles Brown, a third meeting. Four debts were proved. The meeting agreed to accept a composition of 5s. in the £ cash, 2s. 6d. at three months, and another 2s. 6d at six months, by endorsed bills.

In the estate of Mellon and Son, a third meeting. Twenty-five debts were proved. The official assignee read his report, and was directed to allow insolvent his household furniture, wearing apparel, and a policy of assurance referred to in the report—to realise the other assets—and to submit to counsel all questions involving investigation or inquiry, and to communicate his opinion to a meeting of creditors for the purpose.

In the estate of Ambrose Crosbaw, a third meeting. Eight debts were proved. The assignees were directed to act upon the advice of counsel in reference to the plant, &c., mentioned in their report.

NEW SOUTH WALES PARLIAMENT.

LEGISLATIVE COUNCIL.

WEDNESDAY, DECEMBER 30.

THE PRESIDENT took his seat at twenty-five minutes past four o'clock.

MESSAGES FROM THE GOVERNOR.

The Private Secretary was introduced and delivered messages.

The PRESIDENT communicated to the House that the Governor had assented, on behalf of her Majesty, to the following Acts:—1. The Appropriation Act. 2. The Cardiff Coal Company's Bill. 3. The Colonial Sugar Refining Company's Bill.

CITY BANK BILL.

The order of the day having been called,

Mr. PLUNKETT moved the House into committee of the whole for the consideration of the City Bank Bill.

The bill was gone through and reported without amendments.

The report was adopted, and the third reading fixed for to-morrow (this day).

DESTITUTE CHILDREN.

Mr. DEAS THOMSON moved the third reading of the Destitute Children Society's Incorporation Act Amendment Bill.

Bill read a third time and passed, and sent to the Assembly with a message wishing its concurrence.

SEAMEN'S LAWS.

Mr. JOHNSON postponed the motion for the consideration in committee of the Act to amend and consolidate the laws relating to Merchant Seamen until Wednesday next.

SCAB IN SHEEP.

Mr. OGILVIE, without notice, moved that so much of the standing orders be suspended as would admit of amendments being made in the Act for the Prevention and Cure of Scab in Sheep, and passing it through its remaining stages this evening.

Mr. KEMP seconded.

Agreed to.

Mr. OGILVIE moved "That the proviso added to the 13th clause on the motion of Sir W. Manning be expunged," and in doing so read a communication he had received from Sir W. Manning, assenting to the expunging of the proviso, which provided a compensation of 6s. per head for infected sheep voluntarily destroyed.

Mr. DOCKER opposed striking out the 6s., the proviso which had been adopted by the House after two distinct discussions.

Mr. KEMP supported the motion for expunging the proviso.

Mr. PLUNKETT supported the motion for expunging the proviso, having voted against it when it was first proposed as inconsistent with the general scope of the bill.

Mr. COX opposed the expunging of the proviso, hoping that the committee would not undo that which it had done after due deliberation, and after having had four days to consider the proviso. He thought without this proviso the bill had better be thrown out altogether.

Mr. JOHNSON supported the motion for the expunging of the proviso as not desirable to the perfection of the measure, and at the same time open to great abuse.

Mr. WALKER thought the House would not be doing its duty if it passed the bill at all in its present imperfect state.

The question having been put a division was called, and there were—

Ayes, 14.

Mr. Plunkett	Mr. Ogilvie
Dean Thomson	Keep
Hargrave	Johnson
Byrnes	Allen
Towle	Mitchell } Tellers.
Scott	Blaxland }
Campbell

Noes, 4.

Mr. Docker	Mr. Cox
Walker	Gordon } Tellers.

Mr. OGILVIE then moved that the clause providing that the Act shall be in force until the 31st day of December, eighteen hundred and sixty-five, be struck out. The clause he considered altogether unnecessary, as the Act might at any time be altered, amended, or repealed; and it was not worth while to tie up the hands of the Legislature to any particular date.

The motion was not seconded.

Mr. OGILVIE, finding the sense of the House was against him, withdrew the motion.

Mr. OGILVIE moved that the bill be read a third time.

Mr. COX called for a division, and there were for the third reading twelve, against it five—the dissentients being Mr. Docker, Mr. J. Campbell, Mr. Cox, Mr. Walker, and Mr. Gordon.

The bill was then read a third time and passed, and sent down to the Assembly with a schedule of amendments, inviting concurrence.

The Council adjourned at a quarter-past six p.m. until four p.m. to-morrow (this day).

LEGISLATIVE ASSEMBLY.

WEDNESDAY.

THE SPEAKER took the chair at twenty-seven minutes past three o'clock.

REMOVAL OF MR. CHATFIELD.

Mr COWPER asked the Colonial Secretary, "Whether there will be any objection to lay upon the table of this House a copy of the correspondence or reports from Mr. Chatfield, or minutes respecting the conduct of that gentleman as Superintendent of Police, while on especial duty in the Southern and Western districts, having reference to his removal from the public service?"

Mr. W. FORSTER said, in answer to the hon. member's question, he begged to say that there would be no objection on the part of the Government to the production of these papers if a formal motion relative thereto were made; but at present the papers were not completed. There were in fact no minutes of the Executive Council in relation to this matter, but there would be shortly. He did not, however, wish to leave an impression that the Government were likely to alter any decision at which they had arrived, although nothing of a formal character had been done.

SOUTH CREEK.

Dr. LANG asked the Secretary for Public Works, "1. Whether it is the intention of the Government to repair the piece of road, extending about half-a-mile from the Great Western Road to the South Creek Railway Station, so as to enable loaded teams to traverse it with safety; and if so, when will this necessary improvement for the neighbourhood be effected? 2. Whether it is the intention of the Government to erect a rough goods shed at the South Creek Station, to prevent goods passing to and fro by the railway from being damaged, from exposure to the elements, as they are liable to be at present, from their being merely laid upon the ground and not under cover of any kind?"

Mr. HOLROYD said in answer to the first question, it was not in his power to repair the piece of road in question, as it was not in his department, but he had procured the information that the road was now being repaired by the Department of Lands. In answer to question No. 2, he begged to say that no complaints had been received of goods being damaged from exposure to the elements at the South Creek Station, but a rough goods shed would be erected if it was found necessary.

RETURNS.

Mr. W. FORSTER laid upon the table some returns relative to the number and classification of prisoners in the Government lunatic asylums.

PETITIONS.

The undermentioned petitions were presented and received:—By Mr. PIDDINGTON, from magistrates and others resident at Wingham, Manning River, praying the Government to provide a punt for the convenience of those who resided upon that part of the river; by Mr. LEARY, from a large number of tradesmen, shopkeepers, bakers, storekeepers, carriers, and others, setting forth the grievances under which they had suffered in consequence of the irregular payment of wages of the contractor, who was forming a portion of the Great Southern Railway, and praying relief.

REMOVAL OF MR. CHATFIELD.

Mr. COWPER rose to move the adjournment of the House for the purpose of bringing under the notice of the House the removal of Mr. Chatfield from the position of superintendent of police. He did not clearly understand the hon. member's answer to his question on the subject. He said there would be no objection to the production of the papers if a motion to that effect were made, but that he would not produce them except by order of the House, and the hon. gentleman led him to believe that a formal course had not been decided upon, although the case had been determined upon. This was the first time that an officer had been dismissed from the Government service without some charge being made against him. He was given the opportunity to resign, but he was informed that if he did not resign he would be dismissed. It was not according to the principles of British justice to dismiss any man without first telling him the charge against him, and allowing him the opportunity to answer it. (Hear, hear.) He had known Mr. Chatfield a considerable time, and he thought a more honourable, zealous, and he thought he might say a more efficient officer was not in the public service. (Hear, hear, and oh, oh.) He thought he was at least such a public officer, that some consideration should have been shown to him. He understood that the reason of this gentleman's dismissal was, that he had caught sight of some bushrangers and had failed to capture them. But on that ground several other officers should have been dismissed. Whether he when Colonial Secretary was sufficiently severe, was now a question for the House and the country, but during that time, Mr. Morisset, Mr. Orridge, and Sir Frederick Pottinger, also sighted the bushrangers, and failed to catch them, and they were not dismissed. If the public service was to be a service to which any gentleman could aspire to he could not understand anything more damaging to it than for the Government to say to one of their officers, "There is no charge against you, but you must be dismissed." He should not have made those remarks but for his inability to understand the remarks of the hon. gentleman in reply to his question.

Mr. W. FORSTER said he looked upon the remarks of the hon. member as wholly irregular and entirely unjustified. He had made them at an inconvenient time and in an inconvenient method. He had brought charges against the Government which, if well founded, he could not have proved, inasmuch as the papers were not before the House, and therefore he (Mr. Forster) declined to go into the merits of the case. In reference to the papers, however, he might say that it was not desirable to produce papers in answer to questions. He thought in many cases it was desirable that a discussion should take place in reference to papers, and the opportunity was not afforded if the papers were produced in answer to questions. What he desired to say in answer to the question was, that the Government had no objection to the production of the papers, nor any desire to produce them, but if the hon. member put a motion for their production on the paper he would not wait for a formal order of the House but produce them at once.

Mr. COWPER, jun., said it appeared to him that the hon. member did not wish to produce the papers, and thought by waiting for an order of the House he should escape the necessity, as the session would be a short one, and the discussion on the motion would probably not come on. He did not see what right the Government had to keep a public officer in suspense month after month after they had arrived at a decision in reference to him. Mr. Chatfield was formerly a Clerk of Petty Sessions, but was appointed to an office in the old police force. When the new Police Act came into operation he, as one of the officers, was transferred into it. If therefore he had been removed for incompetency, that reason would be far stronger as against those who were not in the old force but appointed in the new force. There were several superintendents who had followed bushrangers but who had not overtaken them. If there was any great reason for his dismissal why should not the Government tell him and let him have an opportunity to answer it? Since the introduction of responsible government we had never had a case like this to deal with—an officer being told that, because he was considered inefficient, he must either resign or be dismissed. He did not think the House would allow the Government to act in this manner with any individual, whether he be an inspector or a common constable. The Colonial Secretary, it had been stated, told Mr. Chatfield that the Inspector-General was of opinion that he was inefficient; but the Inspector-General told him (Mr. Cowper) that Mr. Chatfield was one of the best superintendents he had in the police force. Was it the fact, it might be asked, that the Inspector-General wanted to get rid of Mr. Chatfield and another officer in order to make way for the promotion of his own son? It was scarcely to be understood how the Colonial Secretary should have told Mr. Chatfield that he was entitled to inquiry, and afterwards have told him that inquiry would do him no good. A gentleman who had been seven years in the public service, without any fault being found with him, had a right to inquiry when dismissed in this peremptory manner. If no other charge was brought against him than that of failing to capture bushrangers, he had a right to inquiry for the sake of the public service, and that inquiry should be heard as soon as possible. Mr. Chatfield had asked whether he was accused of being absent from Canowindra when the bushrangers were there, and stated that he was at Cowra at that time by order of the Inspector-General. The Colonial Secretary blamed him for this, and the House had therefore a right to stand between Mr. Chatfield and his superior officer in this respect. It was also reported that Mr. Chatfield had been blamed for remissness in having, whilst searching a hut for bushrangers, allowed the escape of a man who had hidden in a cask. He (Mr. Cowper) did not think any reason could be brought forward why an officer like Mr. Chatfield should be kept two or three months without his pay by the Government. If the case was so clear against him that the man was so palpably inefficient and incapable, there could be no difficulty on the part of the Government in coming to a decision at once. He heard of another gentleman at Fort Bourke being given notice that his services were no longer required, and there was another gentleman stationed somewhere at Illawarra, a Mr. White, whose services were to be dispensed with. A board of inquiry had ascertained the state of this gentleman's health, and reported favourably. This officer had conducted his duties to the satisfaction of every body. There was a report that the Government finding that they were unable to dismiss more than one or two officers to the satisfaction of their supporters, had written to the Benches of Magistrates throughout the colony for opinions in reference to the police force and the working of the new Act. Now, a Minister might go to the Auditor-General or to the Collector of Customs for advice upon certain matters coming within the scope of their departments, but it could scarcely have been anticipated that a Minister would descend to seek advice from benches of magistrates as to the working of an Act or the efficiency of the police. The questions submitted to them were perfectly absurd. It was the more extraordinary that such a course should have been pursued when we knew that the officers of police had made serious accusations against these gentlemen. It appeared to him that in dealing with an officer of this kind specific charges should be made, and that he should be placed upon his defence. If the officer could not then satisfy the Government by justifying the course he had pursued, no doubt they had a right to dismiss him from the public service; but they had no right to dismiss him in this peremptory manner without allowing him an opportunity of justifying himself. The superintendents of police had had great difficulties to contend with in every district, and especially had this been the case with regard to Mr. Chatfield. The charge of inefficiency had, he (Mr. Cowper) believed, been brought against this gentleman solely on the ipse dixit of the Inspector-General of Police.

Mr. DALGLEISH said the hon. member had shown good reason why inquiry should be made into the conduct of several other officers other than Mr. Chatfield. Nothing could come of the present motion but waste of time. The proper mode of procedure would be to obtain the papers and lay them before the House, so that other hon. members could come to a conclusion upon the merits of the case.

Mr. GARRETT thought the usual course pursued by Government in dismissing public officers had been unwarrantably departed from in the case of Mr. Chatfield, and this was what the hon. member for Orange complained of. Mr. Chatfield having been dismissed without inquiry. This was a most dangerous course for a Ministry to adopt. If the whole public service was to be thrown under the control of Ministers so that they could dismiss or retain public servants as they chose, whatever the grounds, the sooner the American system of changing the whole of the public servants on every change of Ministry was adopted the better. The course of conduct evinced towards Mr. Chatfield was only equalled in unfairness by that exercised towards Mr. White. This gentleman had as a friend a person who strongly opposed one of the present Ministers, and therefore the case looked extremely suspicious. Not a single complaint had been made against Mr. White's conduct in the discharge of his duties. His dismissal was notified to him not because he was one of the last appointed officers of police, or because of reductions having to be made in the service; but he was sent about his business because he was appointed by the previous Government.

Mr. MARTIN called attention to the fact that there was a distinction between police and other public officers, and that it must be shown where grounds for removal existed, and when the force were in active service it would be highly inexpedient to waste time by calling upon the officer to show cause why he should not be dismissed. The police, when in active service, must be treated much the same as a military officer when the army was in the field. At such times prompt action was required, and the ordinary course could not be pursued. All the hon. gentlemen who had spoken were entirely wrong in their remarks as to why this gentleman had been removed, but when the papers were laid on the table it would perhaps turn out that a single letter, written by Mr. Chatfield, was sufficient to justify his removal.

Mr. DARVALL thought it important that the police should be dealt with as fairly and equitably as possible, and though there might be cases in which it would be necessary to supersede or suspend an officer, yet, after this was done, the Government would have plenty of time to inquire into the matter at their leisure. He hoped it would not be allowed to go abroad that an old public servant should be dismissed merely because his superior officer had been mistaken in the discharge of his duty.

Mr. MARTIN pointed out that nothing had been said by any member of the Government about Mr. Chatfield having been dismissed without enquiry, all that was said was that he had not been called upon to show cause why he should not be dismissed. A full enquiry into the case was quite consistent with Mr. Chatfield not being called upon.

Mr. ROBERTSON thought it inconsistent and unfair to condemn a man without calling upon him for his defence. He ought to have an opportunity to be heard.

Mr. SADLEIR denied that officers in the field were dismissed without enquiry. They were put under arrest, and subsequently tried by Court Martial.

Dr. LANG admitted that many inefficient officers had been appointed by the late Government, but the same thing might be said of every Government that had preceded it. In the case now under consideration he could see no reason arising out of the circumstances of the case why Mr. Chatfield should be debarred from the rules of common justice.

Mr LEARY said that as it had been insinuated that he had had something to do with the removal of Mr. Chatfield, he took that opportunity of denying it. And with regard to the report that a bushranger had escaped from this officer by concealing himself in a cask, he had never taken any part whatever in publishing that report. He had, however, heard it, and from very many persons, some of them being of sufficiently reliable authority to cause him to believe it. As to Mr. Chatfield's removal, if it had been for misconduct, then it would be only fair that that officer should be called upon to show cause; but if the Government considered that this branch of the service required to be retrenched, and that in consequence this officer was dismissed, it would be absurd to say that he should be called upon to shew cause. Besides this, such a charge as this came with a bad grace from members of the late Government, because desiring to reduce the department, they removed Mr. Gordon, Mr. Zouch, jun., and Mr. Tipping, without sending them any letter calling on them to show cause why they should not be removed. He could see no reason, if Mr. Chatfield was to be removed because his services were not required why it was necessary to send for that gentleman and call upon him to show cause why he should not be so removed. He knew nothing against Mr. Chatfield personally, and believed him to be a most gentlemanlike man. He had no personal feeling whatever against him, and had only mentioned him incidentally as one of those who were physically unfit for the duties with which they had been entrusted. He had said this on account of the sight of that gentleman having been generally reported to be defective. He regretted that he had mentioned Mr. Chatfield's name at all.

Mr. COWPER, jun., said that he had mentioned the honorable member for Narellan because he had heard that that honorable member had been whispering away Mr. Chatfield's character in a conversation with the Colonial Secretary (Mr. Forster) within the walls of that chamber.

Mr. LEARY was not aware that he had said anything to the prejudice of Mr. Chatfield as an officer in the police beyond what he had stated in his place. He did not know that he had had any such a conversation with Mr. Forster, as appeared to be supposed; but he must deny that the honorable member had a right to call him to account for a private conversation. Whatever he might have said, it was scarcely necessary for him to affirm that he had not mentioned Mr. Chatfield with a view to "whispering away" that gentleman's character. Those who knew him would know that he was incapable of anything of the sort.

Mr. COWPER, in reply, said, that he was willing to withdraw the motion. Still, he did think it was a very hard case that Mr. Chatfield should be removed or called upon to resign without any tangible reason being assigned for the course which had been taken, or an opportunity of defence offered, supposing his removal was based upon some implied fault. It appeared to him that an officer should not be called upon to resign without special reasons for the adoption of such course by the Government. It was not desirable that any Government should act unadvisedly upon the expression of any general prejudice. If he had done so when in office he should have dismissed Mr. Morisset, Mr. Zouch, Mr. Orridge, and the Inspector-General, and, in so doing, he would have dismissed four of the best officers in the service; for it would be remembered there had been a very strong opinion against them at one time. He hoped the time would never come when any officer would be dismissed without an opportunity of defending himself.

The motion was then, by leave, withdrawn.

ASSENT TO BILLS.

Messages were received from the Governor notifying his Excellency's consent to the Appropriation Bill for the first quarter of 1864; to the Cardiff Coal Company's Bill, and to the Colonial Sugar Company's Bill.

RECORDS OF THE HOUSE.

Mr. ROBERTSON said he observed that in the Record of the Proceedings of the House, which he held in his hand, there was an incorrect report as to the part which he had taken in the proceedings of the previous day. As a matter of privilege, he objected to any account being so printed, respecting him, if it was not true. He was indifferent to what was so printed, but if it was desirable that any such account should be printed at all it ought, at least, to be correct—it ought not to be untruthful, as it was. He was in a position to prove that the account in the business-paper was, in two respects, untrue. The account was as follows:—"Question of order.—The Speaker having given his decision upon a point of order referred to him by the honorable member for Shoalhaven (Mr. Robertson); and Mr. Robertson disputing that decision, and continuing to speak to the point of order;—the Speaker rose and addressed the honorable member on the subject. But the honorable member continuing to stand, he was ruled out of order, and several times directed by the Speaker to sit down." (Hear, hear.) He denied that he had ever been directed to sit down by the Speaker, as stated in that paper. (Oh, oh.) He repeated his denial of the statement. (Ironical cheers.) The hon. the Speaker said, "The hon. member will sit down;" that was what the Speaker had said. (Interruption from an hon. member on the Ministerial benches.) He should not condescend to reply to any interjectional remarks. He repeated it—the statement that the Speaker had directed him to sit down was utterly untrue. (Oh! oh! oh!) Both sides of the Press bore him out in what he now stated—both newspapers stated that what the Speaker said was an assertion that he would sit down, and not that he gave him direction to do so. (Derisive cheering.) If hon. members did not understand the English language he (Mr. Robertson) could not help it; they ought to go to school again. To assert that a man will do a thing is not a direction to him to do that thing. The Speaker did not ask him to take his seat as he should have done. In the record of the proceedings of the House, the words used ought to have been truthfully reported. It should have been the Speaker said the hon. member would sit down. (Laughter.) The account was, he believed, otherwise incorrect. It stated that the Speaker "several times" directed him to sit down, but the Speaker had not spoken to him more than once, according to his recollection, in which he was borne out by the recollection of others. He therefore moved that the entry on the votes and proceedings on the debate on the point of order of the previous day, being incorrect, ought to be expunged.

Mr SPEAKER suggested that the motion of the hon. member should be made to refer to the revised paper.

Mr. ROBERTSON said that he referred to the printed paper which had been put upon the table, and was indifferent as to whether it had been revised or not. He wanted the matter to be tested. If that was a final document he took exception to its statement as being incorrect.

Mr. GARRETT seconded the motion, but was interrupted with loud cries of question. He maintained that having seconded the motion, he was entitled to speak notwithstanding the interruptions of hon. members. He (Mr. Garrett) thought this was an incorrect record of an incorrect procedure, and on that ground he felt inclined to vote for its being expunged. In his opinion it was dangerous and irregular to allow the use of such doubtful terms in the Votes and Proceedings as the word "several." If the hon. member was requested to sit down twice or thrice it should have been so stated, and not that he had been "several times" requested to sit down.

Mr. DALGLEISH said the hon. member for Shoalhaven was wrong in stating that this order was only given once.

Mr ROBERTSON. There was no order.

Mr. DALGLEISH said that the Speaker was in a position to order any hon. member to comply with the regulations of Parliament, and that if he did order the hon. member to sit down in the most peremptory manner he only did his duty. As to the hon. member's invitation to eat dirt, all he could say was that the hon. member had eaten more dirt in the last twenty-four hours than he (Mr. Dalgleish) hoped to be called upon to eat during his lifetime.

Dr. LANG said the hon. member for Shoalhaven seemed to be under a mistake in endeavouring to establish a difference between the mode in which the Speaker's injunction to him was conveyed and an express command. In the situation of authority the Speaker occupied in the House, he conceived that his injunction was equivalent to a command. (Hear, hear.) It was the polite manner of expressing a command. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. ROBERTSON, in reply, said: Hon. members have given their version of this matter; but, Sir, I apprehend it will not be imagined that the Sydney Morning Herald, or the Empire, would very much go out of their way to make a misrepresentation favourable to myself, and I find that these papers, representing as they do, I presume, the statements taken down by shorthand writers as to what transpired, are more correct than the hon. member for West Sydney.

Mr. PIDDINGTON. I rise to order. The hon. gentleman, I think, is not in order in quoting from a newspaper report of what took place.

Mr. Robertson not having resumed his seat,

Mr. SPEAKER. The hon. member will sit down while the point of order is being discussed.

Mr. Robertson sat down.

Mr SPEAKER. The hon. member cannot, except with the consent of the House, quote from any newspaper report of the proceedings of this House.

Mr. ROBERTSON. Nor do I, Sir. The objection of the hon. member was premature, and your decision is equally premature, as I had not done so.

Mr. SPEAKER. I was called upon to decide a point of order. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. ROBERTSON. The usual course for the Speaker to have taken would have been, to have said, "The hon. member for Shoalhaven has not quoted from any newspaper," and not to have given a decision against me upon a suppositious case. I presume I may mention the fact that the two newspapers—and I hold them in my hand—and that I may do without breaking the law—I hold them in my hand. Sir, and here they are, Sir—(holding up the papers)—if any hon. members object to what I say. These two newspapers make a statement of what transpired;—a statement taken down at the moment by gentlemen of ability, and not in any way working together—working on opposition journals—and this statement entirely bears out my statement of this matter that the hon. the Speaker did not desire me to sit down, but that the Speaker said, I "would" sit down; and that my answer was, as stated by the hon. member—"I do not know whether I will." That was quite a proper answer to a statement—to an assertion of the Speaker that I would sit down. It was quite a proper answer to an assertion that I would, because, Sir, how did you know that I would? How did you know that I would not walk out of the Chamber when I was insulted, as I conceived myself to be by yourself—

Mr. PIDDINGTON rose to order. One hon. member is not entitled to address offensive expressions to another in this Chamber, and it is not in order for any hon. member to say that he was insulted by the Speaker.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I did not say so. (Oh, oh.) I said "As it seemed to me."

Mr. PIDDINGTON. I object to any such expressions being used in reference to Mr. Speaker in the chair, where he is not in a position to defend himself, when they would not be tolerated if applied by one hon. member to another.

Mr. SPEAKER, who was nearly inaudible in the gallery, was understood to say that the hon. member qualified his expression.

Mr. ROBERTSON. I have said that both sides of the Press have reported the proceedings of yesterday, and they have neither of them stated that you desired me to sit down, and I deny that you ever did. You asserted, Sir, that I would, but that was a mere assumption of yours, as it seems to me, because I might have walked out of the Chamber. I might have preferred resigning my seat to being told what I would do. If the Speaker is entitled to request any hon. member, or to command any hon. member to sit down, by all means let him do so; but I submit that he can make no such demand or such request. No such demand or request was, however, made. Both of the newspapers—reporting, as they do, what transpired, and looking at the matter from different points of view—agree in their reports of what took place. They do not say that the occurrence happened more than once, as this document, which I take exception to, does; and they both say that the Speaker said, "The honorable member will sit down." In spite of all hon. members may say, there is a great difference between the Speaker's making a request and his making an assertion. It is a matter of so consequence to me; it is not of the value of a brass farthing what the House may do with regard to this motion; but I will call for a division upon it, because I believe—and I care not how many hon. members may vote antagonistic to that belief—I believe that the statement there is utterly false.

The question was then put, and negatived on the following division:

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S ASYLUM BILL.

A Message was received from the Legislative Council transmitting the Destitute Children's Asylum Act Amendment Bill.

On the motion of Mr. MACLEAY, the bill was read a first time, and its second reading fixed for Friday week next.

WAYS AND MEANS.

The House then went into Committee of Ways and Means.

Mr. EAGAR moved the following resolutions, "1. Resolved, That towards making good the Supply granted, or to be granted, to her Majesty for services to be defrayed out of the Consolidated Revenue of the colony, it is expedient to authorize any number of Treasury bills to be made out at the Colonial Treasury for any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the sum of £400,000. 2. Resolved, That the principal sum or sums of money to be contained in such Treasury Bills shall be chargeable upon, and paid out of, the Consolidated Revenue of the colony; and that the interest on such principal sum or sums of money, which shall not exceed the rate of fourpence per centum per diem, shall be chargeable upon, and paid half-yearly out of, the Consolidated Revenues of the colony and the growing produce thereof. 3. Resolved, That all sums of money raised by such Treasury bills shall be paid to the credit, and form part of, the Consolidated Revenues of the colony. 4. Resolved, That after twenty-four calendar months from their respective dates, such Treasury bills, or so many of them as may from time to time remain undischarged and uncancelled, shall be taken and pass and be current, for the principal sum and interest they respectively contain and represent, in all payments whatsoever required to be made to the credit of the Consolidated Revenues of the colony." It was not necessary in proposing these resolutions that he should address the committee at any great length. Their object was the providing for the financial deficit by what were termed Treasury bills. He might state that the consolidated revenue of the colony had been considerably overdrawn; the revenue did not come in in sufficient quantity to meet the current expenditure. On Tuesday week last the consolidated revenue account at the Bank of New South Wales was overdrawn to the amount of £40,000; on Tuesday last the overdraft at that bank was £50,000. The reduction in the amount had arisen from the payments of the rents for 1864; and he expected that on the 31st of December the accounts would be about square. But on the 1st of January the whole of the salaries of the public officers for December would have to be paid, and there would also then have to be paid the half-year's interest on the public debt. Part of this was payable in the colony, but the bulk of it was payable in London, and it would not be debited to the revenue until March next. The resolutions he now moved embodied the principle of supplying the present deficit in the revenue by the issue of Treasury bills, to anticipate as far as need might arise, the insufficiency in the revenue of 1864. He might mention that in 1857, Mr. Jones, the then Treasurer, passed through committee of Ways and Means, and caused to be enacted into law, a Treasury Bills Act. It was now proposed to pass a measure of the same kind, with this difference—that the Treasury Bills Act of Mr. Jones was intended to anticipate the proceeds of the sales of debentures authorised to be raised under existing Acts, whereas the present proposition was to anticipate the revenue of the next year—which he hoped would be largely increased by the projected scheme of taxation. He might state—what was not contained in the resolutions—that the project of issuing these Treasury bills was confined to the term of four years from the 1st of January, 1864—the bills to be paid off at the end of that term.

Mr. COWPER inquired whether the object of the hon. member's proposal was not to meet the votes of Parliament of the present and previous years, rather than to apply the money to the requirements of 1864, or of any subsequent year.

Mr. EAGAR replied that the words "granted or to be granted" applied both to the past and to future years.

Mr. COWPER thought the Treasurer's proposal would be likely to lead to some confusion. He understood that this £470,000 was to meet the alleged deficit.

Mr. EAGAR said he had not said a word about the deficiency. This sum was to be applied to make good the supply granted or to be granted for services.

Mr. COWPER contended that this proposal would lead to confusion, if next year's expenditure was to be met by these bills. He hardly thought Parliament would give the Government power to raise £400,000 to meet next year's expenditure. And he was led to believe that this amount they would require would be about £250,000. He thought the Government might ask for this sum to meet the sums voted for 1861, 1862, and 1863, or to be voted for the supplementary estimates of 1863; but he objected to the Government asking for a sum of £400,000 to enable them to deal with the money for the year 1864. If this sum were granted to them he believed it would be sufficient to meet the deficiency and any additional sum required, and he supposed they would then give the go-by to any additional taxation.

Mr. EAGAR thought the matter the committee were called upon to consider was very simple. The obligations of the Government were of two kinds. They arose first out of the services of the year 1863, and those commencing in 1864 have no relation to this double kind of engagements. The position of the Government was this: That they were largely overdrawn in the Consolidated Revenue account, and the current revenue was insufficient to meet the obligations of both accounts. Under these circumstances the Government asked to raise such a sum of money as would relieve the Treasury from the overdrawn account and the obligations of the Government whether they arose out of this year or out of the next.

Mr. STEWART would oppose anything that was asked to meet the expenses of the year 1864, but he would go to the extent of assisting the Government to meet the liabilities incurred up to the end of this year. But to issue Treasury bills for liabilities to be created in the year 1864 he would give it all the opposition he could. For the past year they had expended above their income. Now he said he would not give his support to any Government that would not have an income equal to their expenditure, because the country was quite equal to bear their expenditure.

Mr. EAGAR explained that these Treasury bills were to be paid out of the consolidated revenue, and were only intended to anticipate the consolidated revenue, he therefore trusted the committee would sanction this proposal.

Mr. SAMUEL thought it was immaterial whether the expenditure was for the year 1863 or 1864; but there was no doubt that they were dealing with the Ways and Means of the year 1864. When the hon. Treasurer brought down his financial statement, he brought down the deficit of 1863 as carried to the 1st of January 1864, therefore they were dealing with the Ways and Means of 1864, and the proposition was to provide Ways and Means to meet the expenditure of 1864. He had proposed to meet the expenditure partly by loan and partly by increased taxation. They had already dealt with the expenditure and Ways and Means for 1863. They dealt with this last year, and in bringing down his financial statement the Treasurer dealt entirely with the estimates of expenditure and Ways and Means of the year 1864. It appeared therefore that they were in this position, that they required money to meet existing engagements, partly appropriations for the year 1864, and partly to meet the balance brought down as the deficit of 1863. It appeared to him immaterial whether hon. members dealt with the deficit of 1863 on 1st January, 1864, or on the 31st December, 1864; but their policy was to see what was likely to be the deficit or surplus at the end of the year 1864, and deal with it accordingly. He should, however, have been glad to have heard from the Treasurer when he proposed to create this loan, whether he had ascertained what probability there was of his disposing of these Treasury bills. He thought he should have given them information of what probability there was of their being sold, and what he intended doing if he was unable to raise the money in this way.

Mr. EAGAR said he had had assurances from persons connected with the monetary institutions of this colony that they would take up these Treasury bills; and for this purpose hon. members were aware that on Monday night the banks paid the balances due by them in sovereigns, and they would avail themselves of these Treasury bills, bearing 6 per cent. interest.

Mr. ROBERTSON did not think there was any doubt of the hon. member being able to sell these Treasury bills, and he was surprised that the hon. member for Wellington should take exception on that ground. (Mr. SAMUEL: "I take no exception.") A statement had fallen from the hon. member for Wellington which required to be considered by the Treasurer. The hon. member said it did not matter whether the money was wanted at the end of 1863 or 1864. This was of small consequence, but it was a matter of importance whether this was the right time to deal with the question. And he (Mr. Robertson) said it depended on what amount of taxation the House consented to what the balance could be. If the hon. member was willing to consent to all the taxes the hon. member asked the Assembly, he would not want the Treasury bills.

Mr. EAGAR said, suppose the committee granted the Government taxes to the amount of £250,000. This would not cover the amount required. [Mr. ROBERTSON: You ask for £450,000.] He said, suppose the committee granted £250,000, would it all be available at the commencement of 1864? It would not, but would come in in dribs and drabs, and be spread over the whole twelve months; it was therefore necessary that the Government should be put in a position to meet the liabilities that would be due at the beginning of 1864.

Mr. ROBERTSON contended that the Treasurer had not dealt fairly with the committee. The hon. member knew that there would not be any deficit at the end of three days, because the rent that would come in for pastoral lands, would make the consolidated revenue account square, if there was not a surplus, which he believed would be the case. The hon. member said the new taxes would amount to £250,000, but he had proposed £450,000. Did he abandon half his taxes, and how did the hon. member know the House would allow him to pitch his proposals overboard. The hon. member said the Government only asked for £250,000 taxes, and this sum would come in in dribs and drabs, and he said so would the expenditure. The money was not therefore wanted on the 1st January, 1864, but was only required from month to month. He did not think they should cry stinking fish, and make their affairs out worse than they really were. He believed that the Treasurer would find the consolidated revenue account nearly square at the end of the year.

Mr. EAGAR admitted that the hon. member was correct in saying that on the 31st of the present month, the consolidated revenue account would be nearly square, and he had stated this when he first addressed the Committee. But it was his duty as Treasurer to look beyond the last day of the month, and if the hon. member had the power of recollection he would remember that he stated although at the end of the year the account would be square it would be brought in debt again at the commencement of 1864 by the amount required for salaries for the month of December, and also by the payment of half year's interest on the national debt, and which amounted to £129,000. So that hon. members must see that although the account would be square they would be brought largely in debt after the 31st of December.

Mr. ARNOLD said it seemed to him that the hon. gentleman opposite had not answered the argument of his hon. friend. The hon. member stated that, although at the end of this year the consolidated revenue would be brought square, a demand would arise for £80,000. (Hear, hear.) Even then, supposing the suggestion of his hon. friend were adopted, the argument of the hon. gentleman opposite was answered. (Hear, hear.) He thought it was a most monstrous proposition to ask at the beginning of the year to borrow to meet the ordinary expenditure of the Government. Such an authority had not been given to any previous Government. It was true that the Chancellor of the Exchequer of England had some such authority, but the circumstances were entirely different. Until he heard the argument of his honorable friend the member for East Sydney, he scarcely understood the intention of the Colonial Treasurer in asking for the power to issue Treasury bills. The system of commencing the year by the contraction of a loan to meet the current expenditure of the Government was altogether new, and a system which he felt sure the House would be very unwilling to adopt without more mature consideration and more convincing argument. The ordinary revenue would be sufficient for the ordinary expenditure, and he thought the House ought to insist upon it that the constitutional course should be observed—that the House should be made acquainted with the expenditure and the scheme by which it was proposed to meet it. In doing this they should require no more than had been required of previous Governments. He should feel it to be his duty to vote against that part of the proposition which proposed to raise a loan to meet anticipated expenditure.

Mr. EAGAR said the only remark of the hon. member to which he would reply was that in reference to precedent. When the hon. member said the present proposition was unprecedented he would refer him to the Loan bill of Mr. Donaldson, which proposed the same thing substantially, although in a different form. In 1857 this power was granted to raise the sum of £150,000 without in any way limiting the power of the then Government.

Mr. COWPER said the hon. gentleman had proved the truth of the statement of his hon. friend. He (Mr. Cowper) was in the House at the time, and was conversant with the circumstances. When Mr. Donaldson took office it was found that there was a deficit of £150,000, and to meet this, if it should be required, power was given to him to raise this amount, but not one shilling of this was ever raised, and the bill by which the power was granted, was still upon the statute book. It appeared to him that this was the first time that the Government had asked for a loan to meet the current expenditure of the day. The Loan Bill of Mr. Donaldson was to meet past expenditure, and this bill was still available for the present Government. The House, therefore, ought to have some assurance that if it gave the Government power to raise £400,000, they would not avail themselves of the bill alluded to to raise £150,000 more. It had been alleged against the late Government that they got the public accounts into a state of confusion, but if the present proposition was agreed to they would be thrown into a state of confusion greater than ever. It appeared to him that the very worst men to manage public accounts were commercial men. (Laughter.) If the House gave the Government this power, besides giving them the taxation they asked for, it would be putting into their hands a greater power than was possessed by any previous Government.

Mr. EAGAR, in answer to the hon. member's argument, quoted from the loan bill of Mr. Jones to show that it was prospective as well as retrospective, the words being "granted or to be granted."

Mr. COWPER. It was quite possible that the wording of the two bills was the same, but he was quite sure if the question had been put to Mr. Jones at the time his answer would have been quite different to that given by the hon. gentlemen opposite. The authority given to Mr. Donaldson and Mr. Jones was to raise money to cover past expenditure, and not to meet anticipated expenditure.

Mr. PIDDINGTON said he did not think there was any great comparison between the Treasury bills of 1857 and the Loan Act of that year. It must be recollected that the Donaldson Loan Act was to cover an actual deficit, but he thought that that of Mr. Jones was of a different description, and warranted the explanation of the hon. Colonial Treasurer. He would read the ninth clause of that Act to show its import. This bill, in nature, was similar to the bill before the House; it was an Act to authorise the raising of money by loan to defray existing contracts for the pur meeting the general necessities of the Government and the country, without any reference whatever to the subject of appropriation. It might be said they had no right to assume this function, and it was only in the precedents quoted that the power sought by the committee stood. Whatever irregularities were in the wording of the resolutions, he said, the course the Government had adopted was not only consistent with the precedents quoted, but was also consistent with the constitutional views laid down by Mr. Speaker.

Mr. WISDOM said: If the resolutions were altered as laid down by Mr. Speaker, this £400,000 would be voted for 1864, and would only cover the expenditure of 1864. The Governor-General's message only alluded to the Estimates of 1864 and the Supplementary Estimates of 1863, therefore this resolution for £400,000 would not go to cover the deficit of 1863, but of 1864.

Mr. SPEAKER said the Committee of Ways and Means had various functions—the function of appropriation and taxation. They could appropriate money out of the consolidated revenue fund and authorise the raising of money for the service of the year, and could authorise the imposing of taxes with a view to meet the requirements of the year. It was not necessary in the two latter cases that a sum should be voted in Committee of Supply; but before money could be appropriated out of the consolidated revenue it was necessary that it should be voted by a resolution of the Committee of Supply. If the House agreed with his ruling it would be necessary to amend the resolutions by omitting the words "or to be granted to," and the words "for services to be defrayed out of the consolidated revenue of the colony," and by adding at the end of the first resolution the words "for the service of the years 1863 and 1864."

Mr. FIDDINGTON said it was not necessary for this loan to be preceded by a resolution of the Committee of Supply, and that was the object of the hon. member (Mr. Arnold), who confounded the twofold character which every Committee of Ways and Means possessed.

Mr. SPEAKER said he had given his ruling.

Mr. FIDDINGTON said he only wished to know whether the resolutions could be submitted in Ways and Means with the verbal alterations suggested by Mr. Speaker without any previous resolution in Committee of Supply.

Mr. SPEAKER: Yes.

MESSAGE.

A message was received from the Legislative Council, returning the Scab Act, with amendments.

On the motion of Mr. WILSON, the consideration of the amendments was fixed as an order of the day for to-morrow.

WAYS AND MEANS.

On the motion of Mr. BAGAR, the House again resolved itself into a Committee of Ways and Means.

The CHAIRMAN informed the committee that the Speaker had ruled that the resolution should be verbally amended, and it would then read as follows:—"Resolved, That towards making good the supply granted to her Majesty it is expedient to authorize any number of Treasury bills to be made out at the Colonial Treasury for any sum or sums of money not exceeding in the whole the sum of £400,000, for the service of the years 1863 and 1864."

Mr. ALLEN moved that the resolution be amended by inserting after the word "expedient" the words "To issue any number of debentures for five years, bearing five per cent interest, and." He was induced to make this amendment through the speech of the hon. member (Mr. Darvall) because he had shown that it would be very inconvenient to the trading community to have so much of their money absorbed by these securities. This amendment would give the Government the option of taking either of these plans, so that neither the Government nor the trading community would be inconvenienced. For his part, he preferred the resolution as it stood, because the whole of the interest would be received in the colony.

Mr. ARNOLD said he understood that, during his absence from the House, a great many extraordinary things had occurred therein. The Colonial Treasurer had introduced a number of new propositions, and the House appeared to have been continually waiting for the blunders of the Ministry to be remedied and the mistakes corrected. When was the time to come when Gladstone going to come down with a scheme to which he intended to stick? (Laughter.) Who was the Colonial Treasurer? Was it the hon. member for West Sydney, or the hon. member for the Williams? (Laughter.) For he had seen them consulting together. He understood the hon. member for the Williams was a supporter of the Government. Mr. ALLEN: (Hear.) He objected to this poaching in the waters of the Opposition. He thought the Government should come down with a scheme of their own, and not be fishing among the Opposition to see what they could catch there. For God's sake let them show what flag they intended to sail under. Were the Government to be fishing for ever to see what their policy should be?—to see what were the opinions of the House, and then embody them in a scheme. A little fish was found swimming in the speech of the hon. and learned member for East Maitland, and he was forthwith hooked and brought into the net of the Ministry. (Laughter.) Let the Government have a scheme to which they could prepare to stand, and not trust all the servile support of those who sat on the same side of the House. He objected to this amendment, and this interference with the scheme of the Colonial Treasurer, who ought to be the best authority for his scheme. If he was of opinion that his scheme was impracticable, to take the suggestion of one of his followers was like admitting that he was incapable to perform the duties pertaining to his office. Such an act by one of his supporters was like telling him that they had no confidence in his foresight, and did not believe he would be able to carry out the project he had proposed to the House. The Government proposed to raise £400,000 by treasury bills, which was pretty well known that they would be sold in the money market here. A supporter of the Government, seeing the difficulty, came forward and said we will adopt a suggestion of a member of the Opposition (Hear, hear.) Was this the Government that asked the House to entrust them with the power to borrow £400,000? When they were going to swallow the dose from the very hand of their supporters, they could hardly expect that the House would trust them with so large a discretion. He should hope that, having changed the policy of the Government some half dozen times—having been snubbed by his chief—having had his scheme—all his own, and therefore invested on all sides—rudely thrust aside—he should hope that the Treasurer was not going to be the dupe of his scheme set aside by one of the extreme tails of the supporters of the Government at the suggestion of the Opposition. He had no wish whatever to see the Government displaced. (Ironical laughter.) Any desire that he had on that subject was entirely set aside, for he saw the present Government were lowering and degrading themselves more than their worst enemies could desire. (Hear, hear.) The Ministry were bringing about their own fall. (Hear, hear.) Let them bring in their own measures, and carry them (hear hear), for if they were the Government, they ought to be the best judges of the practicability of the schemes they proposed. Mr. Arnold should suppose this to be one of the most bungling schemes ever proposed to sensible men, but unless it was impracticable, what right had they to adopt a suggestion of one of the Opposition at the instance of one of their supporters? It was not consistent with the dignity of the Government to take the advice of a monthly nurse in the way they had done. (Laughter.) He thought they might give the Government two or three chances. They had withdrawn two tariffs, but let them stick to the third. If the Government were not content with having one chance, let them fix a number—say, three or five—and then stand by that number. Honorable members had been threatened to be sent about their business. He was sensible enough that it would be within the discretion of wise men—if there were any such in the present Government—to obtain a dissolution as soon as possible, for he could see if they did not soon go to the country some hon. gentlemen would have very little chance indeed. Let them go before their reputation was altogether lost. (Ironical cheers.) The hon. gentleman appeared to acquiesce in the sentiment. He could assure the House that he gave them this advice with the most perfect sincerity. (Laughter.) It was a matter of the utmost indifference to him whether they dissolved the House or not; but he did think that, for the honour of their country, and the honour of their new-born institutions, these men should not be tolerated in the responsible situation which they occupied. Responsible! What were they responsible for? They assumed no responsibility whatever; but appeared to him to be like the old Ministers before the inauguration of responsible government. He did not know what executive functions they fulfilled, as the whole functions of the Executive were at a stand-still. The Government were abrogating the functions of the Executive by waiting for the action of the House. Perhaps it was consistent in those gentlemen who thought the previous Government exceeded their functions by having the boldness, when necessary, to act without the authority of the House, but who, when defeated, resigned. It appeared that this Government existed upon their threats. (A Voice: Our votes.) They had had no vote. When the Government saw they were going to be beaten they abandoned their scheme, and took the advice of their monthly nurse the hon. member for the Williams. (Laughter.) The Government were now living upon the crumbs of the House—the sufferance of the House. The House knew that it was not in the power of the Government to dissolve the House; but even if any advice of theirs on this subject should be taken, he should not be deterred from doing his duty to his constituents. (Cheers.) He had no desire to occupy a seat in that chamber unless he represented those who sent him there. He desired to come to an issue with hon. members opposite on some principle or another, but they seemed to have no policy. They wanted these £400,000 for something, but whether it was to meet the deficit of the present year, or of any other year, they were undecided. The real question before the committee would be whether this loan could be applied to the deficit of the present year or indiscriminately to that and the exigencies of the coming year. The proposal was most dangerous and insidious. It was a totally new proposal, for which, notwithstanding the researches of honorable members opposite, they had been unable to find a parallel. The peculiar period of the financial year as in England, and the time at which Parliament met, rendered necessary some provision by Treasury bills, which provision was not necessary here. If the present proposal were carried the result would be that hon. gentlemen opposite who so indecently threatened the House with dissolution, would, if the dissolution be obtained, have provision made for the exigencies of the coming year, and would be under no necessity of making provision by tariff. The Treasurer said at the end of 1864 there would be a deficiency of about £900,000. Supposing that the deficiency at the end of the present year which would be required to be met by what were called dribs and drabs, amounted to between £400,000 and £500,000, it would leave only £400,000 as the deficit for 1864, and the Government with power to draw £400,000 by Treasury bills, could do without any changing tariff at all. Then if a dissolution were granted them they would have means at their disposal to carry on the public service for the year, and need not call Parliament together until January, 1865. He did not say they were likely to make such a course, but the power ought not to be left in their hands. No Government who ever occupied those seats had, since the institution of responsible government, come down to the House and asked for such a measure of confidence as this. He could not believe that the House with its eyes open could assent to it. None would have objected more violently to such proposals than hon. members on the Government benches when they were in Opposition. No preceding Government ever proposed to meet current expenditure by so large a proportion of loan. So far as the late Government were concerned no loan fund had been used to meet ordinary expenditure. If the House agreed to this proposal they must have extraordinary confidence in a Government that had been in office but two months. Upon these grounds he warned the House as to the steps it should take in dealing with the resolutions now before it. Hon. members opposite had failed to show that the deficit had arisen from other than accidental circumstances. He and others were quite willing to relieve the Government of all difficulties they inherited from the preceding Government, whether the deficit be from accidental circumstances, extravagance, or mismanagement; but they must insist upon the principle that the exigencies of the country, having once been determined, should be met by raising a sufficient amount of revenue to meet them. The late Government never shrank from this responsibility, but came down with a proposal to meet the whole expenditure by current revenue. They adhered to their proposal, and being beaten upon it, they went out thinking the House would repose its confidence in another body of men. The present Ministry then came into power, and they should be [illegible] prepared to meet difficulties. The former Government complained of no difficulties, for there were none. They had arisen solely from the desire of this Government to lower those who had preceded them, and to shield their own incompetence. There could be no difficulties in the way of meeting current expenditure with current revenue. The proposition was a dangerous as well as an insidious one, for its purport had not been explained by the hon. Treasurer. He hoped the House would not agree to such a resolution as this, which was intended to anticipate difficulties that had not arisen, and were not likely to arise. There was no absolute necessity for telling the world at large that we were obliged to resort to loans in order to carry on the Government of the country; nor could he imagine that any set of men could be so blind to the vast resources of this country, as not to see that it was able by a judicious system of taxation, to meet all its liabilities. But he doubted much whether the Government had not some ulterior designs, when he saw that provision had been made for enabling them for a whole year to dispense with the authority of Parliament, since they would be wholly independent of its assistance until the end of next year. This amount would enable them to meet all the financial requirements up to the end of 1865, and thus they might dissolve this House, as they had threatened, without being necessitated to call the next Parliament together before the end of the year.

Mr. WISDOM said the amendment was out of order, not being consistent with the terms of his Excellency's message recommending the loan.

Mr. MARTIN desired to point out two or three very transparent fallacies that the hon. member for Paterson had indulged in. The hon. gentleman had said at least twenty times that the Government had threatened to dissolve the House, in the event of some particular course being taken. He (Mr. M.) denied that the Government had made such threat, and the assertion of the hon. member, even though repeated so frequently, would hardly be regarded as proof in the face of this denial. It would be remembered that the hon. and learned member for East Maitland had, the other evening, pressed him to make a threat of this character; but, on behalf of the Government, he had declined not only to make the threat, but even to give any expression of opinion that such a course would be desirable. He had stated then that it was not the intention of the Ministry to advise a dissolution so long as they could secure a majority in Parliament, and as the Government had not only secured majorities, but sweeping majorities, the time for them to advise a dissolution had certainly not arrived. He had not only never made the threat, but had never even given expression to the opinion. Mr ARNOLD: "I said a Minister." The honorable member had over and over again said "the Government," but whether or not the Premier was the proper organ of Government from whom such an announcement should come, and he had never made such a threat, nor, so far as he was aware, had any one of his colleagues. In so far as he was concerned, rather than hold out a threat of the kind, he had given expression to the contrary opinion. Under such circumstances it was only right that he should declare that the assertion of the honorable member for Paterson that the Government had threatened a dissolution, was entirely without foundation. Mr. ARNOLD: "I did not say the Government, but one of the Ministers." The hon. gentleman had said "the Government" over and over again. No person could be more fully aware than he was of the indecorum of any Ministry making a threat of this kind. He regarded such a threat as highly improper, and this was not the first time that he had given expression to this view; and he could tell the House that if anything should arise to cause such advice to be given, it would be tendered to his Excellency before it was made use of elsewhere. The hon. member next said that the Government got this resolution passed they would be able to go on to the end of the year without any parliamentary sanction. He had been astonished to hear such a statement come from the hon. member, who must have known better. The expenditure of this country was £1,926,457 for 1861, the Government had placed at their disposal £400,000, and then now asked for leave to borrow £400,000. And if they had this permission, not one penny of it could the Government touch without an appropriation of Parliament; and yet, over and over again, the hon. member for Paterson had endeavoured to lead the House to believe that the moment the Government got this resolution passed they could take the money. Mr. ARNOLD: I never said anything of the kind. The hon. gentleman had led the House to believe so; and this was a specimen of the miserable nonsense with which the hon. gentleman had endeavoured to bamboozle some of the too willing hearers that he had on the Opposition benches.

Mr. ARNOLD rose to order. Was the hon. member entitled to use such terms as this? He would ask the Chairman if they were in order; but, whether they were or not, he would not allow the use of such terms towards himself without calling to order the person using them.

Mr. FIDDINGTON did not think it out of order for one hon. member to express his conviction that another hon. member had been talking nonsense.

Mr. ARNOLD: The hon. member is not entitled to use language that is offensive to another hon member, and surely it must be offensive to be told that I bamboozle hon. members with my nonsense. (A laugh.)

Mr. WISDOM thought the words were calculated to give offence, and that they had better be withdrawn.

Mr. MARTIN, under those circumstances would withdraw the word "nonsense."

Mr. COWPER, jun., submitted that the word "bamboozle" should be withdrawn. It was quite as unparliamentary as the word "jockey."

Mr. DALGLEISH had no doubt that the honorable member for Orange would like the honorable Premier not only to withdraw the word "bamboozle," but also the whole speech in which that word had been used. The term, however, was only applied to the arguments used by the honorable member, and not to the honorable member himself. The honorable member at the head of the Government ought not to be called upon to withdraw a fair expression of the expressions taken exception to. The speech of the honorable member was, in his opinion, both foolish and bamboozling (laughter); and if it was foolish and bamboozling why should it not be so characterized?

Mr. WISDOM considered it inexpedient to prolong the discussion. The honorable member had withdrawn the term "nonsense" as applied to the arguments of the honorable member for the Paterson.

Mr MARTIN, in continuation, said that whether the honorable member for the Paterson intended to bamboozle the House or not, such had been the tendency of his speech. If that was not the case, for what object he would ask, had the honorable member concealed the fact that the Constitution Act had expressly provided that not one sovereign could be disbursed by the Government without the authority of Parliament, even if the Government did borrow money by the authorisation of the House? Mr. FIDDINGTON: That is what we are now authorising the House (Laughter.) What they were now proposing was simply to have power given to the Government to borrow money when it should be imperatively required, not to place money at the disposal of the Government. (Hear, hear.) If that were not the case, the Government would be wanting four times as much as the sum mooted to carry on the Government to the end of the year. What was it that the Ministry were asking the House to do? The Colonial Treasurer had laid on the table of the House six elements which went to prove that there would be a deficit of £344,000 at the end of this year. There might be a larger amount of savings than was anticipated; but even if an allowance of £100,000 were made there would still be a balance of £200,000 to be provided for. This had to be provided against. By reason of large payments which had recently been made into the Treasury they might be so far in funds to-morrow—the last day of the year—that there might be no deficit in the cash account of this particular year. (Hear, hear.) But then there were demands that might be made upon the Treasury at any moment. The difficulty was to provide for war that which might arise out of past obligations that might at any time come in. Supposing that money was so required it would have to be reckoned for and paid in the year in which it might so fall due. He scarcely supposed that the hon. the member for East Sydney (Mr. Cowper) would object to the Government providing against such contingencies as it was incumbent upon the Government to pay. They were not proposing to meet the current expenditure by loan. (Hear, hear.) That was another fallacy put forward by the hon. member who preceded him. They were proposing to have power to borrow to meet liabilities already outstanding. They had been urged to borrow more than £350,000, it being understood that when the House met, and it was ascertained that further taxation was required, they should have some measure for increased taxation, and a power to borrow, if requisite, so as to keep the credit of the country intact. Not one penny would be raised by borrowing except for the payment of liabilities already incurred by independent Governments. If the money was not required, it would not be borrowed. The resolution, as it now stood, appeared to be so worded as to meet the view of the honorable member for Sydney East (Mr. Cowper). If there were no overdraft at the end of 1863, the deficit must be a deficit of 1864. If they met all the liabilities of the current year, and there was still a balance to the credit of the Government at the end of it, it was clear there could not properly be said to be any deficit by that year. He denied that this was to be considered as a party question; it was not to be so regarded. What was desired was to do what was the clear duty of every Government—to preserve the credit of the country. ("Hear, hear," from Mr. Cowper.) The resolution was a resolution giving authority to borrow money at such times when money might be required to be paid—thus preventing the Government from being left at the mercy of any banking institution where money might be kept. When these resolutions were passed the Government of the matter would be disposed of so far as the borrowing was concerned, because it would still be necessary to bring in a bill, which might be opposed at each of its stages. And if the bill were passed, the matter would not even then be beyond the control of the House, because it would still be necessary for the Government to get the Estimates passed before they proceed with the question of taxation. They would have to go through the ordinary formalities, and finally to obtain the additional sanction of the Appropriation Act. The moment they could get this additional scheme of taxation disposed of, the Government proposed to go on with the Estimates as speedily as possible, with due regard to the exercise of that vigilance which ought to be displayed in dealing with such matters, and he had yet to learn that there was anything irregular in the course they proposed to pursue. If hon. members opposite desired to displace the present Government, there would be other opportunities for them to make the attempt, without throwing the finances of the country into disorder. He thought it scarcely wise to prolong these discussions night after night, and to endeavour to make attacks upon the Government which could have no practical result. He hoped the hon. member opposite (the late Premier) would not be a party to any opposition to this motion, unless he saw that, on constitutional and proper grounds, opposition was necessary.

Mr. COWPER said that when he put his question to the Minister for Finance this afternoon in reference to the wording of this resolution he did not anticipate such a discussion as had taken place, but certainly the answer of the hon. member did surprise him, and the present debate was probably owing in some degree to the expression of that surprise. He admitted a good deal that had fallen from the hon. the Premier, but he must say that that hon. and learned member had made some admissions that were rather damaging to himself. In the first place the hon. and learned member admitted that at the end of 1863 there would be no deficit in the Treasury. (Hear, hear. He (Mr. Cowper) was delighted to hear such an admission after all that had been said about the enormous deficit which it was alleged would then exist. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. MARTIN: He said that there would probably be no deficit in the cash account.

Mr. COWPER: That is the real account. (Hear, hear.) He thought, too, that the honorable and learned member was hardly ingenuous in his observations concerning what had fallen from the hon. member for the Paterson. If the Government had not stated from the first that they desired to get this sum of £400,000, not only to meet the deficit, but also to make it available to meet the current expenditure of 1864, the objection would not have been made in the form in which it had been made. The strongest objection urged had not been met by the hon. and learned member. If the committee were willing to pass this resolution in the shape of that of Mr. Donaldson on the 5th December, 1856, and if the Government distinctly informed the House that they would only use the moneys so raised to meet the deficits of previous years, and not to cover the current expenditure of next year, he did not think there would be the slightest difficulty raised on the part of the committee. It was very satisfactory to know that the demands of the present year had been met out of the revenue of the year.

Mr. MARTIN: The demands already sent in.

Mr. COWPER: Demands were always going over from one year to another. But at all events the thing did not look so bad as it did at the time the hon. member opposite made some of those speeches on the West Sydney hustings. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. DARVALL rose to correct a misapprehension. He had never said that he would have recourse to Exchequer bills or to Treasury bills. If the loan was to be granted he hoped the Government would bring their resolution in such a shape as would admit of the carrying of such a bill, as it would be desirable to pass. The issue of Exchequer bills would do infinite commercial mischief. We could get 5 per cent. premium in England for our debentures, and what would they say of a country which talked of giving £6 2s. for short bills. We should degrade our own national debt by offering £6 1-10 per cent. here when we were getting money freely in England at 5 per cent. premium. It [illegible]

Mr. GARRETT could not see the necessity for passing these bills now, and thought the consideration of the matter might be left for a future occasion, when some progress had been made with the Estimates. It had been affirmed that the money was not required to meet the current expenditure of the year. He power to spend this large sum without any express parliamentary sanction. We ought to know what our expenditure would be before we provided the Ways and Means.

Mr. EGAN said it appeared to him that the present and the late Premiers agreed in their opinions on this question. It did not seem desirable further to discuss the matter, as the House ought to trust the Government with the money asked for.

Mr. SAMUEL thought the question was one of great importance—whether the amount proposed in these resolutions could be raised. For it was notorious that there was just now considerable tightness in the money market. He had some doubt as to whether the bills would be readily taken. For a long period the Government had been dealing with one monetary institution; it had a monopoly of the Government money, and the Government were not in a position to ask a favour of any other of the banking institutions. He should have been glad to hear that the hon. Colonial Treasurer had been in communication with the banks, and that they had informed him that they would be prepared to take up this loan, or any considerable portion of it. The Government ought to have placed themselves in a position to be independent of the colonial money market. In dealing with this market we had to pay interest according to the rate of interest prevailing in the place where we offered our securities. And so far from having offered too high a rate of interest, he thought the Government wrong in having limited the rate of interest, as the banks were now giving more than was proposed to be given by the Government, and it appeared clear to him that the Government would not be able to get the money. In his opinion the Government ought to have obtained authority to take money by debentures as well as Treasury bills. He did not agree with the limitation that was attempted to be placed on the Government as to the particular appropriation of the money to be raised by these bills, as he thought they had a right to take it without any distinction of the kind.

Mr. REDMAN believed the Premier had stated that all demands had been met, but he did not say that all existing demands had been met, and the question they had to consider was how they were to meet all the demands for which they were liable. He did not agree with the hon. member for East Sydney, that this loan should be confined to the expenditure of past years, and believed if this were done they would damage the public credit. He, therefore, thought they should deal liberally with the Government, and give them sufficient to meet not only the expenditure of past years but also the expenditure for 1864. He did not think this should be made a party question by the Opposition, but they should all apply themselves to settling this question without delay.

Mr. SADLEIR agreed with the hon. member for East Sydney that this sum of £400,000 should not be granted to meet the expenditure of 1864. He did not object to the loan for the purpose of meeting their liabilities for past years, but as they had proposed a scheme of taxation for 1864, he did not think they should vote this sum in the manner proposed. He agreed with the hon. member (Mr. Samuel) that they would not get the money in the way proposed, and looked upon the resolutions as waste paper.

Mr. DARVALL said, in continuing the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. Samuel), that they should threaten the banks that if they did not lend them the money they would raise the rate to 7 per cent. and take away their deposits. This, he said, would bring about a financial crisis. He objected to their borrowing money for the short period, and pointed out the loss that would accrue in consequence. He thought if the Government wanted this sum of £400,000, they should propose to raise it by debentures at ten years' date. He contended that they should not borrow on these short dates, but should endeavour to fund their debt.

Mr. FIDDINGTON was opposed to the proposal suggested by the hon. member for Paterson, that the Government did not propose to borrow the money for any long period, but that it was to be paid off at the end of twelve months. He thought the proposal of the Government was infinitely preferable to that suggested by the hon. member.

Mr. COWPER again expressed it as his opinion that the resolution should be amended by omitting the words 1864, and thus confine the loan to the expenditure of past years.

Mr. BAGAR said it was the intention of the Government to retain the words "1864" in the resolution.

Mr. GARRETT condemned the suggestion of the hon. member (Mr. Samuel).

Mr. COWPER asked the Treasurer if he said the Government would insist in retaining the words "1864."

Mr. BAGAR: Yes.

Mr. COWPER said he would then give the resolution all the opposition he could.

Mr. COWPER, jun., said, although he had been silent this evening he did not intend to give his consent to the Government raising a loan to meet the expenditure for the year 1864. He was glad to hear that his statement was borne out that there would be no deficit at the end of the year 1863; and this he contended proved that the Estimates of the hon. Treasurer were, as he had frequently said, incorrect. Seeing that we had only voted the Estimates for the first quarter of 1864 at the same rate as in 1863, why should not the current expenditure be paid out of the current revenue? The hon. member proceeded to deprecate the threat of the dissolution of the House, and observed that he had no objection to the granting of power to the Government to raise £400,000 to cover past expenditure, because he looked upon the free selectors, who, as he said, were the people. He felt quite satisfied that no deficit of £400,000 existed, and that the Auditor-General would have proved it if he had been called to the bar of the House. It was true that they had heard a letter read from the Auditor-General, but he did not attach much importance to that. He simply stated that the accounts were correct, and, perhaps technically, they were, although he was aware that there were a number of bills put away and yet they were set down as outstanding liabilities. He hoped the Government would not insist upon their proposal so far as regarded the year 1864.

Mr. MORRIS, in reply to the arguments of some of the members of the Opposition, stated that there were no such things as loans to meet deficiencies in the revenue in the Imperial Parliament of England. The deficits were always met by Exchequer bills, and these were covered by the revenue.

Mr. BURDEKIN moved as an amendment to the motion the omission of the words "and 1864." He, and other members on that side of the House, were desirous of providing the Government with the necessary amount of money for carrying on the government of the country, but they did not think that the current expenditure ought to be met by a loan.

Mr. COWPER said he hoped it would be understood that they were all agreed as to the necessity of providing for this deficit, but the hon. member had laid upon the retention of the words 1864, and he thought they should not be retained. He was quite sure that the House would agree to give the Government sufficient money to carry on the service of the country, but he thought the House ought to set its face against the proposal to meet the current expenditure by a loan.

Mr. CUNNEEN was quite willing to give the Government all the money required for the current expenditure up to the end of 1864. But the Treasurer wanted more;—he wanted to include the year 1865. He (Mr. Cunneen) must protest in the name of the people of this country against the current expense of the country being paid by loan. If the revenue was not sufficient to meet the expenditure, there should not be the extravagant expenditure of the Government, but we should increase the revenue by taxation. He should oppose the proposal to cover the current expenditure of the year 1864 by loan by every means that the forms of the House would allow. We had gone far enough in raising money by loans for public works. Posterity should not be called upon to pay public debt for the expenditure of which they derived no benefit. Unless the money now proposed to be raised be appropriated exclusively to liabilities belonging to 1863, he should give these resolutions his uncompromising opposition.

Mr. DALGLEISH was also opposed to throwing upon posterity debt for current expenses of Government. But the present proposal was merely to raise money in a temporary manner to cover an excess of liabilities over estimated Ways and Means. We were only asked to give to the present Government means which the late Government proposed to obtain for themselves. The Government had no way added to the necessary expenses of government. He saw nothing dangerous in this proposal. If the expenditure be so reduced as not to require this aid, the Government would not use these bills. There were many precedents for such proposal. To whatever hour hon. members opposite might delay an issue upon the question, he should feel it his duty to remain, as he was desirous of the Government in carrying their resolutions, which they had given good reasons for bringing forward.

Mr. LEARY said the only object of this resolution was to meet the deficiency whenever it arose, and it seemed trifling with the matter to take exception to it on the ground that the deficiency be forced to any particular year. If any claims or outstanding demands were made, it was necessary to have the cash to meet them in order that the credit of the country might be preserved.

Mr. LOVE should oppose the bill on account of the way in which the money was to be raised. The Government ought to have proceeded with the tariff instead of with this bill, because, with the unsettled state of the tariff, no business was doing, and if this bill was passed it would be most injurious to trade. If this resolution were passed to-night, the rate of discount at the banks would be raised 2 per cent. He did not think the money was required, at all events not all of it, and he more particularly objected to the mode of raising the money, which would have a bad effect upon trade generally.

Mr. REDMAN thought the virtuous indignation of the Opposition exceedingly new-born, and that it had been begotten solely by their change of position. The principle that current expenditure should be defrayed only out of current revenue was a very good one, but then the expenditure was going on whilst the revenue was not forthcoming; besides which, there was a larger deficit. These would have to be met, and, if they had any confidence in the Government, the committee should vote this resolution. If they had not, the sooner they put the Government out of office the better. A vote would decide the question, and the committee had better come to it at once.

Mr. ROBERTSON denied that the late Government had ever taken money out of loans to meet current expenditure. He thought the Government had a most unhappy mode of transacting their business, for, instead of going on with the tariff, as it was expected they would do, they had come down with this loan proposal when the House was not prepared to deal with it. He did not deny that there would be a deficit at the end of this year, and had never denied that such would be the case. He believed that it would be about £350,000. The late Treasurer thought it would be larger, but the whole amount was an accumulation from the last seven years. Beyond this, the new Treasurer had his arrangements by which he landed the colony £500,000 in debt at the end of his first year of management. If this was to be the case, the Government must come down with some new proposition that would have the effect of laying some charge upon the propertied classes, who at present paid little or nothing of taxation. If they must expend so much money they should, at least, be in a position to explain how that came to be the case. Observing that no Minister was present, he begged to move that the Chairman do leave the chair. He did this because he thought that the Ministers ought to be present.

The motion having been seconded, a division was called for and negatived by a majority of 27 to 5.

Mr ROBERTSON continued: He made the motion which had just been submitted to the House because he thought that the Finance Minister at least ought to be in his place. (Hear.) That hon. member would not venture to say that the revenue for this year was on the decrease. Still he thought it strange that the sales of the lands were now so managed that they could not be properly advertised. How could the public lands be expected to be sold if they were not brought, as they ought to be, before the public. Instead of reducing the advertising of the land sales they ought rather to increase them. How, in the name of heaven, could they expect to sell their lands under such circumstances? The hon. the Colonial Treasurer had stated to a public meeting that he would not have a balance in the hand at the end of the year, and now it was found that there was not any deficit of the kind he had been pleased to anticipate. All necessary funds that were required to meet outstanding liability were readily conceded by those members who had been members of the late Government. The fact, however, was it was the evident desire of the present Government to saddle the late Government with the deficit that might accrue since they had vacated office (Loud cries of "hear," and that he should certainly oppose them in. The Government had said also that they brought forward measures identical with those introduced by the late Government; but if that was the case why had the late Government been put out of office?

Mr. ARNOLD called attention to the state of the House, but the bell having been rung a Message was made.

Mr. ROBERTSON proceeded: There had been at least some manhood in the late Government in their acts. (Ironical cheers.) They stood by what they had proposed—(cheers)—but it was never possible to know how to deal with this Government—for they literally stuck to nothing. When they got a box on the ear they immediately turned round and hanged the tactics altogether. In his opinion the proposition of the Government was one which every representative of the people ought to combat. The late [illegible] to be bilked by such a process, and quietly submit to the filth which hon. members on the Government benches had endeavoured to squirt upon them for the last three or four months. If the Government were as strong in their opinions as they were in their position, they would not hold so contemptible a position in the House and before the country. The House had given the Government three months' rations, and it was their duty during those three months to make the necessary provision for themselves.

Mr. DANGAR expressed himself in favour of the policy of borrowing money to pay on the deficit.

He considered that the hon. member for the Hawkesbury (Mr. Fiddington) was acting in a very inconsistent manner, because on the 4th September last, on Mr. Smart's Ways and Means he said: "There will be a deficit of £419,471 14s. 9d at the end of the current year. Why did not the Government come forward and meet that deficit in a manly way. Moreover, the estimated expenditure for 1864 was over two millions, and still, such were the arrangements, that at the close of this year there was to be a deficit of over £419,471, which they were to meet by borrowing. To meet it the Colonial Treasurer had asked them to have recourse to borrowing, and a more dangerous and immoral proposition had never been propounded. The course of this borrowing to carry on a large current expenditure was one the country could not approve of—one which no community would sanction." And yet this was the very course the hon. member now supported.

Mr. CALDWELL moved that the Chairman report progress, and ask leave to sit again on Tuesday next.

Mr. DALGLEISH hoped the hon member would withdraw his motion, and allow the committee to proceed to a division.

Mr. KIAR KER opposed the postponement of the debate.

Mr. CALDWELL thereupon withdrew his motion.

The question that the words proposed to be omitted stand part of the question was then put, and carried upon the following division:—

Ayes, 20.

Mr. Martin	Mr. Haworth	Mr. Lackey
W. Forster	Allen	Kisden
Eagar	Terry	Buchanan
Wilson	Leary	Piddington
Holroyd	Gordon	Redman
Macpherson	Morris	Kaper (Tellers.)
Yalgleish	Macleay

Noes, 18

Mr. Cowper	Mr. Caldwell	Mr. Morrice
Robertson	Sutherland	Dangar
Love	Sadleir	Lave
Hart	Garrett	Alexander
Lang	Flett	Burdekin (Tellers.)
Cunneen	Cowper, jun.	Tighe

The amendment was accordingly negatived.

Mr. CUNNEEN wished to ask the hon. Colonial Treasurer one question, and upon the answer would depend the vote he should give. It was this—Is it the intention of the Government to pay any part of the current expenses of 1864 out of this loan if granted?

Mr. BAGAR said he would answer the hon. gentleman's question in this manner—If there should be obligations upon the Government during the early part of next year which he should be unable to meet out of the consolidated revenue, he should certainly use the Treasury bills for that purpose.

Mr. COWPER: Then I will give all the opposition in my power to the passing of the bill. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. MARTIN: There is nothing new in that. It has been said over and over again all the evening.

Mr SUTHERLAND said he intended to vote against the proposal to issue Treasury bills to meet the current expenditure of 1864, believing that that year had a right to look after itself.

Mr. MARTIN: I have already said that we have no desire to meet any deficiency that may arise in the expenditure of 1864 with the proceeds of these bills. What we desire is, to be in a position to anticipate the funds that will be raised by the increased taxation. That taxation will not materially increase the revenue for perhaps several months, but past liabilities may meet us within the first month, and the honour of the country requires that these should be satisfied.

Mr. ARNOLD said he should not talk the "nonsense" with which the hon. member (Mr. Martin) had attempted to "bamboozle" the House; because to do so would be most disorderly. He should not copy the language of the hon. Premier, who told us at the beginning of the session that he intended to be very decorous, now that he had assumed a high office. He did not think the hon. gentleman's language was worthy of imitation by anybody. He had thought the gentleman had said amounted to this—that he would use this £400,000 to pay current expenditure if he required it, and he knew quite well that he would require it. (Hear, hear.) If he did not anticipate that he would require it to meet the current year's deficit, why he asked for it? Was it that he did not the hon. gentleman feel safe in limiting the purposes for which the loan was to be raised to pay the deficiency that might arise from the arrangements of previous years? The hon. gentleman was not dealing fairly with the House. He had a certain purpose in view, and by was he not honest enough to avow it? Such a proposal was the most dangerous one ever made in any House of Legislature. There was no use trying to think the question; the country would understand it. The proposal of the Ministry was not to meet a deficit that had arisen out of previous years, but it was to evade the responsibility of meeting the requirements of the current year and the coming year. He did not believe that there was a single constituency, or a single country that would approve of a proposal of that kind. All the sophistries, and worse, that had proceeded from the members of the Government would not bind the country, any more than they had blinded the members of the Opposition to the real nature of the proposal. He objected to the proposal to meet current expenditure by loan, and maintained that these Treasury bills were not all similar to Exchequer bills. He designated the proposal of the Government as an attempt to raise money any how, and thought if this motion were granted, the Ministers would expend the money to meet current expenditure. He regretted that he had paired off with an hon. member on the subject of Ways and Means, and this would preclude him from voting on this important question.

Mr. ALLEN was surprised at the speech of the hon. member, who, he said, was a bankrupt politician and a disappointed man. He maintained that the proposal of the Government was to relieve the late Government from the liabilities they had created, and that it would be extinguished at the end of two years. He agreed with the principle that it was not right to borrow money to meet current expenditure, but there were peculiar circumstances in this case, and the loan was to be redeemed within two years. He pointed out that at the end of two years they were to have current revenue to spare, and the Treasurer could pay Treasury bills, therefore they would be redeemed within the stated period.

Mr. BURDEKIN contended that the speech of the Premier raised a fresh issue, because from what he stated it appeared that he did intend to use the money if it were required for 1864. He disapproved of the proposal to issue Treasury bills to be borrowed money to meet current expenditure. With a view of testing the opinions of the committee, he moved that the words "that such sums to be carried to a certain account, and only drawn upon for sources during 1863," be omitted.

The hon. Mr. MEAGAR said the former amendment was similar to his own proposal, and should be directed to.

Mr. BURDEKIN thought this amendment should be put, because hon. members understood that the loan would only be used to meet expenses incurred in 1863, but as some of the amounts would not come due till 1864, it was necessary to leave this year in the resolution.

The CHAIRMAN ruled that the amendment could not be put.

Mr. W. FORSTER maintained that in providing for the deficit of 1863, they also stood committed to provide for that of 1864. He denied that this vote would be an appropriation; it would be simply to raise sufficient money to meet the liabilities of the Government. He thought it was most unfortunate that the money was simply to provide against a contingency that might never arise. The comparison therefore, between the present case and that set up by the Opposition, entirely failed. The question that the committee had to consider was, not whether it had confidence in the present Government, but whether they had the necessary steps to provide for the current expenditure. He thought the committee would do well to grant the Government what they asked for without further discussion. He thought the challenges from the Opposition, to the Government to stand or fall upon the proposals of the Treasurer, were not in good taste, and he thought the Government, that is, the Government with the Opposition, as hon. gentlemen on that side assumed, they should have come to a decision on this subject long ago.

Mr. COWPER thought the idea of the hon. member who had just sat down, that the House ought to place at the disposal of the Government a sum of money, to appropriate just as they pleased, was a most extraordinary one. The honourable g

The Ruth left Tahiti on the 5th November, and Samoa (Navigators) on the 4th instant; she has had light N.N.E. and S.E. winds nearly all the passage, except when off New Caledonia, when she encountered a violent S.W. gale, which drove her as far as Norfolk Island.

The cargo of the kembla (s.) consists of 80 kegs butter, 6 cases eggs, and sundries.

The James Paterson (s) left Rockhampton on Thursday, December 24th, and Gladstone on Saturday, December 26th, at six a.m. Experienced strong gales of east and S.E. wind, with heavy squalls of wind and rain, accompanied by a heavy confused sea, as far as Cape Byron; from hence to Sydney moderate east and northerly winds, with cloudy weather. Arrived at Sydney Heads on Wednesday at six p.m. The Don Juan, schooner, was heading at Rockhampton for Sydney. The Payaway, brig, was in the river, bound for Wide Bay. Passed the Telegraph (s.) on Wednesday, at six a.m., eight miles north of Sea Cliffs. At five p.m. passed the Omega, barque, beating to the north, off Broken Bay.

HUNTER'S HILL AMATEUR REGATTA.—Through the indefatigable exertions of the gentlemen forming the committee, the regatta to be held to-morrow bids fair to eclipse all former events. The various races have been judiciously arranged, and, as will be seen by the published list of entrances, there will be no lack of competitors. The Amateur Champion Cup will bring together all our crack pullers, and a close contest is anticipated. The Royal Sydney Yacht Squadron will also be fully represented; Mr. Parbury's new yacht Xarifa showing for the first time, and should the weather but prove favourable, an excellent day's amusement will be afforded.

To the Editor of the Herald.

SIR,—I have read with some vexation the details of a suit instituted at Shanghai in October last against Mr. J. Manning, for salvage on the steamer William IV., and I regret much that your account was not taken from the China Record, a copy of which is in my possession, as, in this paper, extracts are published from no less than five letters, which had been received by Mr. Manning from his principal in this colony previous to the attempted destruction of the vessel, announcing to him the fact that insurance had ceased. The originals were given in evidence at the trial, thus absolving him entirely from so villainous an imputation.

It would indeed be a strange zeal that would prompt the most worthless person to jeopardise his character for life for the sake of realising insurance proceeds for a company for which he was merely an agent, but in this case not only was it known to Mr. Manning that the vessel was unprotected, but it is a fact also that a policy originally taken out to cover his own commissions on the vessel had elapsed for nearly a year from want of instruction on his part to renew it.

There can be little doubt but that an attempt to sink the steamer was made by some one well conversant with the details of an engine-room, and probably by a person, who by being the first to give alarm, would expect to share in salvage; and Mr. John Manning, perhaps, made an unscrupulous enemy, by too openly and unguardedly expressing his suspicions affecting a person in that position without being able to support them by legal proof.

I have the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,
EDYE MANNING.

Sydney, 30th December.

To the Editor of the Herald.

SIR,—The Board of Directors of this company have noticed in your paper of the 26th ultimo the publication of a trial for salvage of the William 4th steamer held at Shanghai in October last.

In this it appears that an imputation was attempted to be cast by a man named Reils (on hearsay evidence) upon the agent of this company, as having been himself the party who had attempted the destruction of the vessel for the sake of recovering the insurance money for his principal.

At a board meeting held this day, the directors unanimously resolved to relieve Mr. J. Manning from so gross a stigma, by a publication of the fact that long before the disaster occurred, he was in possession of letters from Sydney advising them that their policy on the vessel had lapsed and would not be renewed.

I am, Sir, your obedient servant,
D. L. WAUGH, chairman.

The Sydney Morning Herald

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 31, 1863.

IN the Legislative Council yesterday the assent of the Governor, on behalf of her Majesty, to "The Appropriation Act," "The Cardiff Coal Company's Act," and "The Colonial Sugar Refining Company's Act" was communicated to the House by message brought down to the House by the Private Secretary.

The City Bank Bill was taken through committee and reported without amendments.

The Destitute Children's Society's Incorporate Act Amendment Bill was read a third time, and passed.

The Seamen's Laws Amendment and Consolidation Bill was postponed until Wednesday next.

On the motion of Mr. OGILVIE, the bill for the Prevention of Scab in Sheep was recommitted.

Mr. OGILVIE proposed to expunge the proviso added to the 13th clause, providing compensation for sheep which the owner elected to have destroyed.

After some discussion, the proviso was struck out on division, by a majority of 14 to 4.

The bill was read a third time and passed.

The Council adjourned at a quarter-past 6 p.m., until 4 p.m., this day.

IN the Legislative Assembly yesterday,

Mr. W. FORSTER, in reply to a request by Mr. Cowper that he would produce any correspondence or reports from Mr. Chatfield, or minutes respecting the conduct of that gentleman as superintendent of police, having reference to his removal from the public service, said that though the Government had arrived at a decision on the case, the matter had not been formally before the Executive Council, and therefore that no minute existed with reference to it. The papers might hereafter be produced, if the House so ordered.

In reply to Dr. Lang, Mr. HOLROYD said that the half-mile of road from the Great Western Road to the South Creek railway station was now under repair, and that there were no complaints as to want of accommodation for goods at that station, but that a rough goods shed should be erected if called for.

Mr. COWPER moved the adjournment of the House for the purpose of censuring the Government for the course which it had pursued with reference to the removal of Mr. Chatfield, which, he contended, was a most arbitrary proceeding, and such as never had been taken with reference to any officer in the public service. This gentleman had been treated unjustly, in that no opportunity had been afforded him of making any explanation; and he ought not to be dismissed without this opportunity being given.

Mr. FORSTER declined to state the grounds upon which the Government had acted with reference to Mr. Chatfield. The correspondence would be produced if the House so ordered.

After some observations from Mr. COWPER, junior, Mr. DALGLEISH, and Mr. GARRETT, and Mr. LEARY, the motion was by leave withdrawn.

Mr. ROBERTSON, as a matter of privilege, brought under the notice of the House a statement printed and published in the votes and proceedings of that day, purporting to be a report of certain proceedings on the previous day on a question of order, which, he contended, was utterly erroneous, and he moved that the entry be expunged from the votes.

After a short discussion, the motion was negatived by 30 to 2.

The House having gone into Committee of Ways and Means, and the Governor's message having been read,

Mr. EAGAR moved resolutions authorising the issue of £400,000 upon Treasury bills bearing interest at fourpence per cent. per annum, chargeable upon, and payable out of the Consolidated Revenue, and after the expiration of twenty-four months to be taken and pass current in all payments on account of the revenue. The necessity for this loan was generally conceded, and the course now proposed to be taken was similar to that which was taken by the then Colonial Treasurer, Mr. R. Jones. These bills were to be resumed in twenty-four months, and would be provided for by increased taxation.

Mr. COWPER said that the resolutions proposed left it ambiguous whether this loan was to be used to cover old liabilities, or whether the Government intended to apply it without any restrictions to the service of the year 1864.

Mr. EAGAR said that the Government considered that it was at liberty to deal with this loan in its discretion.

Mr. SAMUEL said that it was quite immaterial whether the deficit at the end of 1863 was treated as the expenditure of that year or of 1864, as the balance must be carried over to the latter year. The more important question, however, was as to the prospect of these bills being taken up.

Mr. EAGAR said that he had had assurances from the representatives of the banks that these bills would be taken up largely by these institutions.

Mr. ROBERTSON was indisposed to give his sanction to this loan until the Government had perfected its scheme of taxation.

Mr. ARNOLD and Mr. COWPER both held the view that the Ministers should not have the power of dealing with the proceeds of these loans at their discretion.

Mr. PIDDINGTON considered that the Government was not asking anything unreasonable. The question was entirely one of confidence in the Government.

Mr. DARVALL considered that before the Government could ask the House to trust it with the proposed loan, they ought to state clearly and distinctly what they intended to propose and stand by. This mode of raising money by Treasury Bills was very objectionable, and to attempt to raise it in this country, in which the money market was already tight, would cause a serious injury to the mercantile community. The proper mode of raising this loan was by debentures, which could be negotiated upon advantageous terms in the London market.

Mr. GARRETT raised a point of order upon the resolutions before the committee to the effect that they were informal and could not be entertained, on the ground that no sum could be voted in committee of Ways and Means in excess of what had been already voted in Committee of Supply. The practice of Parliament showed that the course now proposed was entirely contrary to parliamentary usage. The point raised was referred to the Speaker, who ruled that there was no necessity for a resolution of this nature to be preceded by a specific resolution in Committee of Supply. The Speaker suggested, however, that the resolution amended should not be prospective.

Mr. ALLEN proposed further to amend the resolution by giving the Government the alternative power of raising the amount required upon debentures.

Mr. ARNOLD jeered the Government for adopting Mr. Allen's proposal, and for picking up their policy at random. The proposal to take this loan with discretionary powers, was really taking discretionary power to carry on the current business of the country with borrowed money. If this resolution was carried, it would virtually be giving the Government power to carry on the government for a lengthened period without calling Parliament together, and would facilitate their threatened appeal to the country.

Mr. MARTIN pointed out the erroneousness of the argument of the last speaker, that the proceeds of this loan could be applied upon a mere resolution of the House. The Government only desired to place itself in a position to anticipate the proceeds of the taxes which might not have come in, to meet the expenditure as emergency might arise. There was no desire to defray current expenditure by means of a loan.

Mr. COWPER said that he would not oppose the resolutions if the Government would consent to limit the application of the loan to the sevice of the present and past years, but that otherwise he should oppose the resolutions at every stage.

Mr. EAGAR declined to accept the suggestion.

After a lengthened debate, the committee divided upon the first resolution, as proposed to be amended by the omission of the words 1864 from the operation of the proposed loan, and the amendment was negatived upon a division by 20 to 18.

Upon the resolutions being put collectively,

Mr. ARNOLD again addressed the House in opposition to the amended resolutions, which he characterised as unprecedented in the parliamentary history of the colony.

Mr. ALLEN taunted the members of the late Government with inconsistency in themselves proposing a permanent loan to defray current expenditure, and refusing to this Government its moderate proposal of a deficiency loan, which must be redeemed in two years.

Mr. W. FORSTER pointed out the impossibility of separating the expenditure of the two years. It was incumbent upon the committee to provide the Government with the means now sought in the peculiar position in which the country was placed.

Mr. COWPER would not consent to arm the Government with greater power than to provide for bygone liabilities.

Mr. MARTIN urged an immediate decision upon the resolutions, reserving further opposition to future stages of the measure.

After a long debate, Mr. GARRETT, at twenty minutes to three o'clock, moved that the Chairman report progress and ask leave to sit again on Tuesday next, which motion was negatived by 20 to 17.

The House had not risen at the time of our going to press.

A DEATH which may be deemed a calamity of a public nature has once more awakened the general sympathy and regret. Just at the moment when the immense cortege attended to the tomb the gentleman whose death we had lately to deplore, another about the same age—for both were still young—also in a public position, and to whom also the future was invested with unusual attraction, was by an accident, not less unexpected, passing away from earth. The Rev. Mr. RICHARDSON, the minister of St. Mark's Church, has, like Mr. CHARLES FAIRFAX, left behind a widow and infant children. In the first instance, everything that pecuniary competence can provide, is within the reach of the bereaved. The lot of the family of the rev. gentleman deceased is otherwise. Out of an income only such as the clerical profession commonly yields, Mr. RICHARDSON effected an insurance of his life for £500. We are glad that he did so, not only for the sake of his memory, but on account of his household. But such a sum would only suffice to carry them through a short stage from their bereavement, and alone would be a transient disguise of the real destitution which must rapidly come upon them, if those who have respected the pastor and neighbour take no heed of the children, or of the cloud which has overcast their temporal prospects.

This, we are glad to learn, will not be the case. The strong emotion awakened in a very wide circle by the sad event will not expend itself in unavailing lamentings. The dead cannot be recalled to life, but his memory may be honoured by the prompt and generous help to supplement a provision too scanty for any but the most temporary purposes.

Mr. RICHARDSON was not much known to the general public until the movement made by this colony to succour the poor of Lancashire. He was active and exemplary as a clergyman—zealous in promoting the educational and other interests of his district in connexion with his own church. But on that occasion he manifested a very deep sympathy with a more public object. We met him many times as a member of the committee, and saw with how much personal effort, and with what enthusiasm, he obtained from all classes of the people some expression of their concern for their suffering though distant fellow-countrymen.

The sympathy he felt for the children of our cotton spinners, whose parents could not aid them by their labour, is now due to his own. The children of the weaver may see once more an industrious father restored to work, to wages, and to plenty, and may find future abundance even rendered more sweet by the contrast with former privations. But from his dwelling, with all he was to his children, or might have been by capabilities, consideration, influence, authority, and care, he has now departed for ever. It is one of the cherished maxims of a popular belief, founded on the strongest of our religious impulses, that Heaven returns to the household of the benevolent and good the blessings they have diffused. A hollow and mocking philosophy may deny a grand general truth, by picking out of the course of life a few imperfect examples; thank GOD, they who hold it are in the minority. Many a poor man takes from his own scanty store what may be necessary to meet the more urgent wants of his neighbours, and says to his wife and children, "We will be none the poorer." Mr. RICHARDSON, from a small income, gave to the poor, we understand, more than would have been due in common judgment. His children could not appreciate his benevolence, but they will find in Christian compassion that such actions will not go unrewarded.

St. Mark's will, we hope, find to-day a warm response from the congregation, and the general public. A contribution neither disproportionate to the case, nor our common circumstance, and the frequent claims on our kindness, would place these children above absolute want, and enable their young mother to educate them for some useful station in life. Mr. RICHARDSON showed his proper regard for their possible dependence to the extent of his means—could he have done more? Those who forbid a clergymen the search for wealth—who bind them to rigid economy, often self-denial—who pay them not more than men often earn in mechanical employment; who expect them to quit their posts when they cease to be efficient for their duties; who enforce upon them their own doctrine of Providence by often leaving them little else to trust to—should certainly be active in their efforts to assist their families when they all.

The season of festivity which awakened such expectation of enjoyment has been saddened by many striking domestic calamities. Thus we have seen Mrs. JOSEPHSON, the mother of a numerous family, taken from them in the midst of the hilarity of the Christmas pleasures, by a death so affecting as to move every heart we have seen the member of our own firm, having more than usual influence and promise, smitten down by a sudden stroke,—we have seen a young minister of religion, respected for his piety and charity to the poor, taken in a moment from his home and people; nor do we forget the misfortune of the young men who found on their holiday a watery grave, two of those persons in other stations of life, whose loss, though affecting a smaller circle, within its surface may be felt not less intensely.

But regrets are useless. The business of life, and even its brevity, will not permit us to indulge long intervals of sorrow. Every man has his share of this, past or to come; but every man has his duties to those who suffer, from thisvery communion in suffering. Those who are not susceptible of such sympathies are incapable of the purest pleasures, and when their day of calamity comes they can look with confidence neither to heaven nor earth, for man they have not befriended, and GOD they have not obeyed.

Often when we have seen ministers of religion carried to the tomb—from a pleasant dwelling—from a family which never felt before the pinching of want,—attended by the pageantry of funereal pomp, and all the tokens of respect and affection—we have called up the contrast which we knew too well—o clergymen's orphans and widows, forgotten by the world and having before them the toil and battle of life. But from such humble homes have often come forth the greatest and noblest of men, whose career has shed lustre once more on a venerable but long-forgotten name. A narrow income is often a grand impulse to effort and perseverance. But what can save a family crushed by absolute destitution?

We commend this case to public notice. Let those who have found in this season nothing to overcast their own domestic pleasures offer to those who have found only mourning, their sympathy or, if needed, their aid. Such a tribute may well close this year and its chequered scenes.

OUR latest American news is still that which was received by the mail, and the outlines of which were published in the Herald of the 14th instant. A perusal of the fuller accounts which we find in the journals that have since come to hand, while fuly sustaining the statement that ROSECRANZ was defeated at the battle of Chickamauga, also reveals the fact that the victory was a very incomplete one for the Confederates. It was intended to have been a crushing and decisive defeat, and at the risk of weakening other armies a very large force had been concentrated in order to make sure of an overwhelming superiority. Part of the plan was carried out, but a part also remained unaccomplished. The attack was evidently well directed, and for a time the Federal army was cut in two. But the indomitable resistance offered by General THOMAS saved the army, and ROSECRANZ, though a heavy loser, both in men and material, was able to fall back to Chattanooga. A defeat, of course, is unfavourable to his prestige, and arrests his progress, but the victory was also a very costly and exhausting one to the Confederates. It appears to have been the policy prescribed by General HALLECK that BURNSIDE and ROSECRANZ should unite, and then march upon Atlanta, which is important as a great seat of the powder manufacture. The execution of this scheme, which might have been carried out if ROSECRANZ had been victorious, and which, if successful, would have severed the principal railway communication between Richmond and the Gulf States, has been certainly postponed by the Federal defeat. But, on the other hand, the Confederates have done nothing more effectual than impose a temporary check on the Federal advance. The scheme may be tried again, and with better luck next time. Both the Federal Generals occupy commanding positions in Tennessee, and the threat said to have been made by JEFFERSON DAVIS, that they should be driven out at any cost, has not yet been executed. It is remarkable, throughout the whole of the war, how impossible it has been for either side to achieve such a complete and decisive victory as would place the defeated army at its mercy. The most bloody and obstinate engagements have left the defeated side too strong to be lightly trifled with, and the victorious side too much crippled to be able to pursue its advantage. Under these circumstances strategy has had less to do with the course of events than courage and equipment, and the war has been a series of battles rather than a succession of campaigns.

The position of ROSECRANZ appears to be strong for defensive purposes. His weakness lies simply in the difficulty of keeping open his communications. He can hold his ground easily if he can be reinforced and provisioned, and if refreshed in that way he is in a position for taking any favourable opportunity for trying a second advance. Unless he can be dislodged he can detain in front of him an army at least as large as his own, and to the Confederates who have to make up by rapid movements for an inferiority of numbers, the enforced idleness of a large army is a great hindrance. Having failed to overwhelm ROSECRANZ, or to prevent his falling back on Chattanooga and entrenching himself strongly there, the only way of forcing him back is by interrupting his communications, and this seemed to be the nature of the strife at the latest dates. The Federal Government was sending forward reinforcements as fast as it could, and the Confederates were doing all in their power to intercept them. If both the Federal Generals can hold their ground and get refitted for a fresh start, then the Confederates will have gained the march into Georgia. But if ROSECRANZ should be obliged to fall back on Tullahoma or Nashville, then the victory will have been anything but barren. Though not resulting as intended in the annihilation of the invader, it will have compelled his withdrawal.

It is getting increasingly evident, however, that both sides are sorely pressed for want of men. Mr. LINCOLN's first draught of 300,000 men is stated on good authority to have fallen considerably short of realising 100,000. A large proportion of even this number are substitutes, and the unwillingness of many of those whose poverty compels them to serve is evidenced by the fact that deserters are being continually shot. The fines for exemption, however, must have put a little money into the Treasury, as every one who declines to serve has to pay three hundred dollars, or about £60. This was intended to be a heavy tax on the peace party among the Democrats, who from political motives might refuse to fight the Southerners, but it has acted as an exemption for the rich, and on that account has not increased the good feeling among the poorer classes. The second levy of 300,000 men, which is reported by the latest news to have been ordered, cannot be more successful than the first, and may prove much less so. In that case the difficulty of filling up the regiments will be evidently increased, for a third levy, which would complete the authorised number, would not do much. A levy en masse, which is equivalent to seizing every able-bodied man that can be found and forced into the ranks, has been talked of, but so serious a step as that would only be adopted as a last resort. Anything like volunteering is obviously at an end, and this proved unwillingness on the part of the people to go in person to the wars is a better test of the popular sentiment than the declamation of the journals can be. That the people love the Union is evident enough; but that a large number do not love it enough to sacrifice their lives for it is also evident.

In the South the want of men is greater still. There, the Government being more despotic in its spirit, has not hesitated to suppress personal rights. Men have been hunted down and forced to join the army, and beyond the few that have as yet by bribery or cunning managed to escape this treatment, the South has no reserve force to fall back upon. It must either war with its present armies, or yield, or depend on French help, and pay the stipulated price.

[FROM OUR CORRESPONDENT.]

MELBOURNE.

Wednesday evening.

THE Albert Club Eleven entertained the English Eleven at dinner, last night. The opportunity was availed of to present Thompson with a silver cup, in acknowledgment of his services as top scorer in the recent match. George Parr officiated as spokesman.

Later news from America published this morning, as coming from Captain Turner, of the Roslyn, to the American consul. The dates are not later than those received by England, and the authenticity is doubted by Americans, who suspect Californian exaggeration.

The Great Victoria cleared for Liverpool with a cargo of wool and 18,153 ounces of gold. The Glencoe cleared for Hongkong with 6466 ounces of gold.

The shipments of gold for the current year nearly equal those of last. Wool sales less animated, but full rates obtained. 600 bales sold of 2100 offered.

ARRIVED—Otto, from Mauritius; Yorick, from London; General Havelock, from Marseilles; Squaw, from Newcastle.

SAILED—Mary and Rose, for Sydney; Mousse de Nantes, for Bourbon.

BY advices from Melbourne it is reported that the captain of the ship Roslyn, from San Francisco, had brought some extraordinary American news, which he had unfolded to the Consul there, to the effect that Virginia had been evacuated by the Confederates, that North Carolina had seceded from the secession, and that Louisiana wished to return to the Union. The whole, however, is a mere cock-and-bull story, as may be proved by a comparison of dates. The Roslyn left San Francisco on the 17th of October, and could not, therefore, bring later eastern news than to the 16th. The latest paper brought appears to have been of the 14th, as the Age acknowledges one of that date, extracts from which appeared in the Herald yesterday. Now we had by the mail direct news from New York to the 17th October, that is, one day later than the Roslyn could possibly bring; and our latest special telegram via Suez, which is dated November 2nd from London, mentions, as the latest American news at that date, that Mr. Lincoln had called for another 300,000 volunteers—a very unlikely proceeding if the rebellion had already collapsed. The captain of the Roslyn, therefore, who arrived at Melbourne on the 23rd of this month, and who seems to have kept his wonderful intelligence back for several days, has been practising on the credulity of his listeners, and trying to find how far he could hoax the gobemouches of Melbourne.

THE LATE REV. G. W. RICHARDSON.—The funeral of the late Rev. G. W. Richardson will take place to-day, from St. Mark's Church, Darlinghurst, at 3 p.m. A meeting of the friends of the deceased will be held in the vestry of that Church, at half-past two, for the purpose of forming a committee to carry out such measures with regard to the widow and children as may seem desirable.

CIVIL SERVICE REUNION.—At a meeting of the committee of the Civil Service Reunion, held at the Volunteer Club, last evening, it was unanimously resolved in consequence of no official reply having been received by the deputation at this late period of the intention of the Government to grant a holiday on the 2nd proximo, to postpone the holiday of the picnic until the 26th January next, Anniversary Day.

FREE TRADE.—We are informed that a meeting of the Free Trade League Committee was held on Tuesday evening, at which it was decided to have the first lecture on the principles of the league delivered about middle of January.

TOXTETH PARK SABBATH SCHOOL.—The anniversary of the above school was held on Tuesday last in the beautiful garden and grounds of the Hon. G. Allen, M.L.C. About 100 children were present, and after heartily enjoying the various games of cricketing, swinging, &c, provided for them by the care and kindness of Mrs. Allen and family, who have long taken a deep interest in the welfare of the children, and to whose untiring efforts the success of the above school is chiefly owing, they were again assembled, and each scholar was presented with a suitable reward. Each child had the privilege of selecting their own book out of a choice assortment of bibles, prayer, hymn books, biographies and tales. After the books were distributed, the children were arranged under the lovely foliage of several fine oak trees, where they were refreshed with a bountiful supply of tea, cake, fruit, &c. They then resumed their sports until dusk, when they returned to their homes highly gratified with their entertainment.—Communicated.

ASHDOWN and CO., Wholesale and Retail ironmongers.—During the time occupied by the REBUILDING of THEIR PREMISES, at the corner of George and King streets, Sydney, ASHDOWN and CO. beg to announce that their business will be conducted in the shop in King-street, formerly occupied by Mr. Inglis, adjoining their gateway, and which now communicates with their large store in the rear.

AUSTRALIAN FURNITURE WAREHOUSE
100, King-street, near Pitt-street.

Messrs. JOHN HILL, Junior, and CO., having now completed the extensive alterations in the premises and show-rooms of the above establishment, beg leave to announce that they will feel honoured by a visit of inspection from their friends and the public in general

November 28th.

FURNITURE, Upholstery, Carpet and Bedding Warehouse, established 1835.—In the Assigned Estate of ANDREW LENEHAN the Trustees have appointed the undersigned to dispose of the extensive collection of superior manufactured furniture, plated ware, chandeliers, bedding, brass and iron bedsteads, carpets, and every thing necessary for the complete furnishing of any description of dwelling at very reduced prices, he therefore invites his friends and the public to avail themselves of so desirable an opportunity of supplying their wants at cost price. ANDREW LENEHAN, 179, Castlereagh-street.

CHRISTMAS FESTIVALS.—Rainbow Wine and Spirit Vaults, Pitt and King streets (established 28 years).—The proprietor begs to call attention of families and picnic parties to his very large and extensive stocks of Wines, Spirits, and Beers, &c., &c., which will be supplied from the above establishment during the forthcoming holidays cheaper than any other establishment in the city, comparing the age and quality of the article with the price charged. The public have a choice to select from a stock of wines of over 6000 dozen bottles, and any quantity in wood, varying in age from three to twenty-nine years old. Also in spirits any quantity can be had at wholesale prices (both in wood and bottle), which is strictly the motto of this establishment,—a good article and no two prices.

One dozen cases are made up to suit the above, consisting of 2 bottles brandy, 2 bottles rum, 1 bottle whisky, 1 ditto old tom, 2 ditto port, 2 ditto sherry, and 2 ditto claret—34s. 6d.

A. TOOGOOD, Pitt and King streets.

TONIC ESSENCE OF CHIRETTA and QUININE, for Weakness of the Stomach, Loss of Appetite, Indigestion, Nervous Debility, Extreme Lassitude, Ague, and is particularly useful in the incipient or first stage of decline. This purely vegetable tonic having been in use for many years, and having been extensively prescribed by the faculty, is now established as the safest and most efficacious medicine of its class ever offered to the public. It will agree with persons of the weakest constitution, and can be safely administered to persons of all ages; and in all cases after taking a few doses decidedly beneficial effect has been the result. As a summer tonic it stands unrivalled.

Dose—a teaspoonful; to be taken in a wine glass of water after each meal.

Prepared exclusively by A. J. WATT and CO., Apothecaries' Hall, 534, George-street, opposite the Police Office, Sydney; and sold in bottles at 3s. 6d., and 6s. each.

The Silent Friend—a popular medical essay, treating upon nervous and physical debility resulting from either youthful indiscretion or other injurious habits or diseases, by Dr. PERRY and CO., consulting surgeons, 126 Castlereagh-street, Sydney.

DINNEFORD'S PURE FLUID MAGNESIA has been during twenty-five years emphatically sanctioned by the medical profession, and universally accepted by the public as the best remedy for acidity of the stomach, heartburn, headache, gout, and indigestion, and as a mild aperient for delicate constitutions, more especially for ladies and children. Combined with the acidulated lemon syrup, it forms an agreeable effervescing draught, in which its aperient qualities are much increased. During hot seasons, and, above all, in hot climates, the regular use of this simple and elegant remedy has been found highly beneficial. Manufactured (with the utmost attention to strength and purity,) by DINNEFORD and CO., 172, New Bond-street, London; and sold by all respectable chemists throughout the world.

DIRECT IMPORTATION OF DRUGS.—W. LARMER is now landing from the Colonial Empire, Duncan Dunbar, and Granite City largeparcels of drugs and chemicals, and patent medicines.

Ching's worm lozenges, Hockin's seidlitz
Hard's farinaceous food, Nelson's gelatine

W. LARMER, 323, George-street.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS.—For all cutaneous complaints, Holloway's Ointment is a sovereign remedy. Health depends on the natural state of the skin; whenever its action is irregular illness results. All can prevent this catastrophe by using Holloway's remedies. Sold by SARPY and MUSGRAVE, 93, King-street, Sydney.

DIARRHŒA instantly relieved by Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. Sold by W. LARMER, 323, George-street.

NOTICE.—Sheep dipped in Hayes' Specific after shearing will be thoroughly cleansed and risk of contagion prevented. Price 6d. per lb. J. E. CLOUGH and CO., agents, Melbourne.

FOR HORSES.—GIBTON'S ERADICATING WORM AND CONDITION POWDER.—These Powders are recommended as a safe and certain remedy for destroying every species of worm that afflicts the horse, as they supersede all other medicines, by giving him additional strength and vigour, purifying his blood, and adding a fine gloss to his coating; and may be given without making any alteration in his food, or intermission in his labour.

Sold in boxes, accompanied by a "Treatise on Worms."

CAUTION.—A spurious preparation, called Gibton's Worm and Condition Powder for Horses, is put forth in this colony. The public are therefore respectfully requested to note the following statement of facts.

On the 4th August, 1848, the late Mr. Robert Nassau Gibton, of Dublin, assigned, for a large sum of money, then paid to him, the recipe and sole property in this celebrated Horse Medicine, to Mr. WILLIAM EDWARDS, of 67, St. Paul's Church Yard, London, by whom only it is now prepared.

The fac-simile signature of the late Mr. R. N. Gibton appears on each outside wrapper, and the fac-simile signature and arms of the said Mr. William Edwards is pasted round each box. All others are spurious and deceptions on the public.

Weekly Wool Sale

MORT and CO. will sell by public auction, at Lyons-buildings, corner of George-street and Church-hill, THIS DAY, Thursday, 31st December, at a quarter-past 2 o'clock,
569 bales wool
2090 sheepskins.
Terms, cash.

(Day of Sale—TUESDAY 12th JANUARY, 1864.)

THE ASH ISLAND ESTATE,
RIVER HUNTER,
Beyond all doubt one of the very
FINEST AGRICULTURAL and HORTICULTURAL ESTATES in the AUSTRALIAN COLONIES.

Terms:—Twenty-five per cent. cash; the nine 12 and 3 years, first year without interest; the two following years 8 per cent. per annum.

MORT and CO. have received instructions from the Honorable A. W. SCOTT, Esq., to sell by public auction, at the ASSEMBLY ROOMS, WATT-STREET, in the CITY of NEWCASTLE, at 11 o'clock, on TUESDAY, 12th January, 1864,
The greater portion of that
TRULY MAGNIFICENT ESTATE known as ASH ISLAND, comprising about 1500 acres of the RICHEST ALLUVIAL LANDS on the HUNTER RIVER and distant only about 4½ MILES from NEWCASTLE.

This splendid property has been recently most carefully surveyed, and the portions selected for sale have been subdivided into FARMS of from 10 ACRES to 35 ACRES EACH, several of which are ENCLOSED, CLEARED, and have FARM BUILDINGS upon them.

These farms comprise the rich lands on the river bank.

Among the many claims which the Ash Island Estate possesses, entitling it to be looked upon as one of the finest estates in the colonies, the following few are sufficient for the present purpose.

1. THE SOIL is composed of RICH ALLUVIAL deposit, and is capable of producing, to any extent, large and profitable crops of ALL KINDS OF FRUITS, the ORANGE being pre-eminent; of MAIZE, LUCERNE, OATS, ALL KINDS OF VEGETABLES, and COTTON—the growth of the latter being particularly vigorous.

2. It is also admirably adapted for the
the production of which has recently attracted much attention, and is likely to become one of our staple products for home consumption as well as exportation.

3. The FACILITIES of WATER and LAND CARRIAGE are as great as could possibly be wished for. The estate has a vast extent of frontage to the River Hunter, with any extent of deep water, to enable vessels to load direct from the spot. On the other hand, the GREAT NORTHERN RAILWAY passes along the adjacent river bank, at the back of the estate, and secures the most perfect land carriage.

4. ITS PROXIMITY to NEWCASTLE (the second great shipping port of New South Wales), to East and West Maitland, Raymond Terrace, and Morpeth, and particularly assures a ready market for all kinds of produce—further secured by the facilities for export to all the markets and ports of New South Wales and the adjacent colonies.

5. THE COAL.—From various experiments at different places, made by careful boring, coal of excellent quality has been invariably found, showing that the seam underlying the whole island would probably prove a good working one, and, from the position, well adapted for inexpensive shipment, no engineering difficulty existing, and deep water frontage along the river banks.

6. The estate is NOT LIABLE TO BE FLOODED—a very material feature to all who have had any experience of farming in this colony.

With these few facts before them, all who are in want of a farm, or a home for their families, are invited to avail themselves of the forthcoming opportunity.

PLANS on exhibition at the Rooms of Messrs. MORT and CO., Pitt-street, Sydney; also, at the Office of Mr. W. H. WHYTE, auctioneer and land agent, adjoining the Assembly Rooms, Watt-street, Newcastle, at both of which places very information can be obtained.

LITHOGRAPHS may also be had on application to Messrs. MORT and CO., Pitt-street, Sydney, and to Mr. WHYTE, Watt-street, Newcastle.

TITLE.—This property is being brought under THE NEW PROPERTY OR TORRENS' ACT, so that purchasers at the forthcoming sale can obtain their conveyances at a merely nominal cost.

The charming Village of LAWSON,
CONTINUATION OF THE TOWN OF EMU,
Comprising about 68 Acres, and forming one of the valuable Properties in the Estate of the late WILLIAM LAWSON, Esq., situate on the
about half a mile from
THE FERRY, ON THE GREAT WESTERN ROAD.

TITLE—Unquestionable; for particulars apply to Messrs. M'Carthy and Son, solicitors, Castlereagh-street.
TERMS—3 years' credit for half the purchase money.

MORT and CO. have been instructed by the TRUSTEES to the Estate of the late WILLIAM LAWSON, Esq., to sell by public auction, at BEATSON'S HOTEL, PENRITH, at 11 o'clock, on THURSDAY, 9th February,
All that valuable property, comprising an area of about having a very EXTENSIVE FRONTAGE TO THE BATHURST ROAD, about half a mile from the Nepean Ferry, as recently surveyed and marked out as the CHARMING VILLAGE OF ALEXANDRA.
68 ACRES,

40 ALLOTMENTS FRONTING the BATHURST ROAD. These allotments vary in extent from a quarter to about half an acre each.
18 ALLOTMENTS FRONTING LAWSON-STREET, each from three-quarters of an acre to 1½ acre.
17 ALLOTMENTS FRONTING WILLIAM-STREET, each from three-quarters of an acre to 1½ acre.
15 ALLOTMENTS FRONTING THOMAS-STREET, each from three-quarters of an acre to 1½ acre.
14 ALLOTMENTS FRONTING SAMUEL-STREET, each from three-quarters of an acre to 1½ acre.

 Several of these allotments front the Nepean River. The subdivision has been so arranged as to enable any purchaser to should he wish to do so.

☞ The cross-streets all lead down to the river, so as to GIVE ACCESS TO WATER TO ALL.
THE VILLAGE OF LAWSON is beyond all doubt
THE PICK OF EMU PLAINS.
The land is of the richest quality, and equally adapted
FOR THE GROWTH OF THE VINE
ORCHARDS OR ORANGERIES
LUCERNE OR OTHER HAY CROPS, or any description of grain.

The situation is BEYOND THE REACH OF ALL FLOODS, a feature which ought not to be lost sight of.

The village of the Lawson is close to THE EMU RAILWAY STATION,
and as the works are now rapidly progressing, the time is not far distant when these lands will be brought WITHIN TWO HOURS DRIVE OF SYDNEY BY RAIL.

The engineering difficulties beyond this point are such that for some time to come
EMU PLAINS WILL BE THE GREAT TERMINUS on the Western Line. This must necessarily very much enhance the traffic to this immediate locality, and add to the value of all property within a reasonable distance of the Emu Station.

THE TERMS are so liberal as to give an opportunity of purchasing to every industrious man who may wish to secure a home.

LARGE PLAN on view at the Rooms, Pitt-street.
LITHOGRAPHS to be had from Messrs. Mort and Co., the Rooms, Pitt-street; or Mr. DONALD BEATSON, Commercial Hotel, Penrith.

TWO PURE MERINO RAMS,
Directly descended from the pure flocks of His late MAJESTY GEORGE the THIRD.
Terms at Sale.

MORT and CO. have received instructions from Captain Williams, of the ship La Hogue, to sell by public auction, at the Wool Sale Rooms, LYONS-BUILDINGS, George-street, immediately after the sale of wool, on THURSDAY, 7th January,
2 PURE MERINO RAMS,
From the celebrated flock of Sturgeon, and directly descended from the flock of His late MAJESTY GEORGE the THIRD, who got his sheep direct from Negretti, the first of the best Spanish races.

☞ The sheep may be inspected on board the La Hogue, and the usual certificate of Mr. Sturgeon is with Mort and Co., the Rooms, Pitt-street.

TO be SOLD, in three lots, pursuant to a Decree in the Supreme Court of New South Wales, in its Equitable Jurisdiction, made in the cause of Ritchie and others against Price and another, with the approbation of the Master in Equity of the said Court, on the tenth of February next, a certain farm, situate at Jamberoo, in the colony of New South Wales, late the property of John Ritchie, deceased, of Jamberoo, aforesaid.

Particulars whereof may in a short time be had gratis, at the said Master's Office, Supreme Courthouse, King-street, Sydney; and of Messrs. MORT and CO., auctioneers, Pitt-street, Sydney; and of Mr. HENRY MILFORD, solicitor, 267, George-street, Sydney; and of Mr. WILLIAM MAGUIRE, solicitor, 139, King-street.

Dated this 28th of November, A.D. 1863.
GEORGE HIBBERT DEFFELL, Master in Equity.

GLADESVILLE, PARRAMATTA RIVER.

Beautifully situated stone-built Waterside Residence, with upwards of one acre of Garden, Orchard, &c., close to the Gladesville Ferry, known as Corner's property.

RICHARDSON and WRENCH have received instructions to sell by public auction, at the Rooms, Pitt-street, on MONDAY, 11th January, at 11 o'clock,
All that parcel of land, containing 1 acre and 12 perches, fronting the Great North Road, and extending to Looking-glass Bay, Parramatta River, being lot 47 of the celebrated Gladesville Estate, on which is a most substantially built stone residence, containing verandah, hall, seven rooms, with large attic above, kitchen and cellar, yard, with water reservoir at the rear, and flower garden in front. The residue of the land is laid out as orangery and orchard, just coming into bearing.

☞ This property occupies a delightful position in this favourite suburb on the Parramatta River, commanding an extensive and beautiful view.

It will be positively sold on the above date, by order of the mortgagee, and parties in search of a waterside residence are respectfully invited to inspect prior to the sale, and not neglect this favourable opportunity for purchasing.
Plan at the Rooms.

FOR POSITIVE SALE.

By order of the Executors of the Will of the late Henry Osborne, Esq.
To close certain accounts connected with the Estate.

MURRUMBIDGEE DISTRICT.

That magnificent pastoral property, called
URANGALINE,
Situated in the MURRUMBIDGEE DISTRICT, about 55 miles from WAGGA WAGGA, and about 80 from Deniliquin, containing an immense area of richly grassed and well watered country, being that portion of the famous BROOKONG,
property lying to the south of Urana or Urangaline Creek, and extending to the boundaries of the MAHONGA, BUTHERWA, and WALLARDOON RUNS.
With Urangaline will be sold
26,200 SHEEP, more or less,
ALL WARRANTED SOUND, and NEVER to have been DISEASED, a fair average of the NOTED BROOKONG FLOCKS.

Terms, liberal.

RICHARDSON and WRENCH have received instructions from the Executors of the Will of the late Henry Osborne, Esq., to sell by public auction, at the Rooms, Pitt-street, on an early day in FEBRUARY next, of which due notice will be given—
The above extensive and valuable pastoral property.

URANGALINE has been recently surveyed, and is found to contain the large area of 106,009 ACRES; or 166¼ SQUARE MILES of the RICHEST GRAZING LAND in the MURRUMBIDGEE DISTRICT. Hitherto it has formed part of the noted BROOKONG PROPERTY, having been mostly used for fattening the large draughts of HO sheep sent to, and so well known in, the Melbourne market, distant from the station about 280 miles.

URANGALINE is bounded partly on the north by the Urana Creek for about twenty-four miles, dividing it from Brookong; on the east, by part of WALLANDOON, the property lately belonging to Mr. Henty; on the south by Mahonga, owned by Mr. R. Rand; and on the west by Mr. William Chapman's Butherwa run. The country consists principally of luxuriantly grassed plains and open box forest, abounding in MYALL and SALT BUSH, and other fattening pasture, including pigface, yams, &c. In addition to the immense frontage to the never-failing waters of the Urana Creek, the run is traversed by two other creeks, on which, at a large outlay, there have been numerous dams formed for assuring further supplies to that part of the property through which they take their course. From the openness of the country, the sheep are run IN FLOCKS FROM 2000 to 3000; and as the run has never yet been fully stocked, it is next to impossible to say what are its carrying capabilities, but it is believed by competent authorities that, with the present improvements, Urangaline would carry from 35,000 to 40,000 in any season, and, with a further inconsiderable outlay for water, a much larger number.

It may be mentioned that Urangaline has been severed from Brookong, with the sanction of the Government, and will be entitled to a separate lease, and also be subject only to its proportion of rent and assessment, the amount of which will be duly announced.

The IMPROVEMENTS comprise a number of shepherds' huts, all in good order, and most of them supplied with water tanks for their convenience.

With Urangaline will be sold the following first-class SHEEP, viz.:—

EWES.—1 year old	..	..	3000 more or less
2 years old	..	..	3000 ditto
3 years old	..	..	2000 ditto
4 years old	..	..	2000 ditto
5 and 6 years old		..	4000 ditto
Aged	..	..	2000 ditto
WETHERS.—1 year old	..	..	3000 ditto
2 years old	..	..	3000 ditto
WEANERS.—About equal sexes		..	6000 ditto
RAMS.—Equal proportions, 2 and 3 years, and aged			200 ditto
Total	..	..	.. 28,200 sheep, ditto.

Of the above, 2000 of the ewes will lamb in March next and other flocks in May and July, as the whole of the breeding sheep will have been put to the rams prior to the sale. The whole will be a fair average of the celebrated BROOKONG FLOCKS, which are admitted to be unsurpassed in any of the Southern districts.

☞ RICHARDSON and WRENCH do not wish to add any comment of their own to the above brief outline of the Urangaline Station and Stock, as they believe that both the quality of the HO sheep and the enormous value and lucrative nature of the run are too well known to require remark.

It need only be stated that the instructions from the trustees are positively to sell, to enable them to arrange the settlement of the estate of the late Mr. Osborne, and capitalists seeking first-class pastoral investment are invited to inspect URANGALINE; and on application to Mr. Archibald Irving, superintendent at Brookong, they will receive every information and attention for thoroughly viewing both country and stock.

 The vendors are willing to make an equitable agreement with the purchaser for the supply of stores for a fixed period, or until arrangements for otherwise providing himself can be completed.

Plan of the run, from recent survey, may be seen on application at the Rooms, where all further information may be obtained.

No. 63-73. Town Clerk's Office, Sydney, 29th December, 1863.

SALE OF LEASE OF TOLLS AND DUES FROM GEORGE-STREET MARKETS for 1864.—Notice is hereby given that the Tolls and Dues arising from the George-street Markets for the year 1864, will be RE-SOLD by public auction, at the risk of the former purchaser, at the Markets, THIS DAY, the 31st instant, at 12 o'clock noon. In the Estate of Mr. P. J. Kilminster.

T. W. BOWDEN will sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, on THURSDAY, the 7th of January, 1864, by order of John Morris, Esq., official assignee,
The interest of the assignee in and to two houses, having frontages to Moncur-street, at the corner of Johnstreet, Upper Paddington, held under a lease for 99 years, at a ground rental of £15 per year for both. The houses are built of brick, cemented on the outside, slated roofs; each house contains four rooms and kitchen; well of good water, and separate yards to each house. The corner one is let as a shop and dwelling at a rental of 15s. per week, or £39 per annum. The second house is on the north side of the shop, and is at present occupied by Mr. Kilminster, who will show the premises.

☞ There is an incumbrance on the property, particulars of which may be learned at the office of the assignee, in Elizabeth-street; or from the auctioneer.

Two New and Commodious Houses in Ocean-street, Woollahra, near to the New Council Chambers, at the junction of Point Piper Road with Ocean-street, never yet tenanted, but fit for immediate occupation.

T. W. BOWDEN is instructed by John Morris, Esq., Official Assignee in the Estate of Mr. P. J. Kilminster, to sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, on THURSDAY, the 7th of January next, at 11 o'clock,
The interest of the assignee in and to the two houses above mentioned, which have just been completed at a very considerable cost under the inspection of a competent architect. The houses are built of brick and stone, cemented with Portland cement, shingled roof. Each contains ten rooms, including servant's rooms and kitchen. There is a good entrance-hall. The two large rooms on the ground floor may be used as one by means of folding-doors of cedar. The staircase and joiners' work generally is of cedar, well finished and varnished.
There is a good supply of pure water from a pump in each yard
The total frontage is 100 feet, and depth 120 feet.
The property is part of the Point Piper estate, let out on leases for ninety-nine years, each house being subject to a ground-rent of only £12.

Particulars of the incumbrance and orders to inspect may be had at the offices of the Assignee or Auctioneer.

Thirteen Building Allotments, forming a Block of Land on the South Head Road, part of Mr. West's Estate, a little beyond the Paddington Brewery, towards the present Toll-gate. The old buildings now on a portion of the land will be sold in one lot, and a limited time fixed for their removal.

This block of land, which extends from the South Head Road to the small fresh-water creek at the rear, has been subdivided into thirteen allotments, four of which will front the main road, and the others have frontages to a new street, which divides the property from east to west, with entrance from the South Head Road.

A plan has been prepared with a view to suit the means of mechanics, clerks, and others who may be desirous of erecting suitable dwellings for themselves on freehold land on the boundary of the city, ensuring a healthy position within a few minutes' walk from their places of business. The allotments fronting the main South Head Road may be considered suitable for shops as well as dwellings.

T. W. BOWDEN is instructed to sell the above property, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, on THURSDAY, the 7th of January, at 11 o'clock.
Terms at sale.

A SIX-ROOMED HOUSE ON THE EAST SIDE OF RILEY-STREET, NEAR TO CAMPBELL-STREET, SURRY HILLS.

T. W. BOWDEN will sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, on THURSDAY next, the 7th January, at 11 o'clock,
A two-storied brick-built house, with verandah in front and back, and containing six rooms, situated on the east side of Riley-street, a little to the north of Campbell-street. To Riley-street the frontage is 16 feet by a depth of 144 feet. The foundation is of stone, the roof slated. A road 20 feet wide forms the back boundary; water laid on.

The premises are well suited for a mechanic desirous of living rent free, or they would pay as a small investment which produces £39 per year. The situation always commands good tenants.
Title satisfactory.
Plan on view at the Rooms.

Two Large Building Sites, fronting the Upper South Head Road, close to the property of Mr. Forrester, a little beyond Waverley House, East of the Tea Gardens, and comprising between three and four acres. To be sold in two lots, being suitable for the erection of first-class Country Villas.

T. W. BOWDEN is instructed to sell by auction, at the Land Sale Rooms, 154, Pitt-street, on THURSDAY, the 7th January, 1864, at 11 o'clock,
LOT 1.—A block of land, having 100 feet frontage to the South Head Road, by 500 feet deep,—the breadth increasing after the first 100 feet to 200, and then gradually decreasing to 150 feet wide at the rear. It is bounded on the south by 500 feet frontage to Paul-street, as shown on the plan. The contents about 1a. 3r. 13p.
LOT 2.—An allotment containing about 1a. 3r., similarly situated on the west side of Paul-street, which separates this from lot No. 1.
At the same time will be sold a piece of land, 50 feet to Paul-street by 210 feet to Crescent-street, directly south of Lot 2.

These allotments rise very gradually from the South Head Road to the full extent in the rear, forming an inclined plane well situated for building upon. They command fine views of the harbour and country villas on both sides of it, including nearly the whole of St. Leonards, and the highly picturesque scenery to the eastward of it, towards Chowder Bay. Abundance of good building stone on the ground. The spot is famous for the supply of excellent water.
Freehold title.
Terms, liberal.
A plan on view at the Auction Rooms.

TO BE SOLD pursuant to an order of the Supreme Court of New South Wales, in its Lunacy Jurisdiction, made in the matter of RICHARD HOUSTON, a person of unsound mind, with the approbation of the Master in Equity of the said Supreme Court, on WEDNESDAY, the tenth day of February, 1864, by Messieurs MORT and COMPANY, at their Auction Rooms, Pitt-street, in the City of Sydney, at the hour of eleven o'clock in the forenoon, certain Freehold Premises, situate in Kent-street, in the said city, the property of the abovenamed Richard Houston, particulars whereof may be had gratis, at the office of the said Master in Equity, Supreme Court-house, King-street, Sydney; of Mr. THOMAS ICETON, solicitor, Elizabeth-street, Sydney; and of the Auctioneers, Pitt-street, Sydney.

Messrs. Mort and Co. held to day their weekly sale of tallow and hides. The tallow market was thinly supplied, and there was not much disposition to operate at present rates. Of the forty casks offered twenty-eight were sold at from 25s. to 29s. per cwt. A lot of eighteen casks brought 28s. per cwt.

HIDES were dull of sale. The high rates charged for freight prevent buyers from operating to any extent. The only lots of importance were a lot of 575 hides, which realised 10s. each, and 315 at 8s. 9d. each. 2440 hides were catalogued, and about 1100 were sold at from 5s. to 10s. each.

Mr. William Tindale sold ten head of Mr. Robert Lowe's heifers, on Monday, at Camperdown:—1 at £10, 1 at £9 15s., 1 at £9 5s., 1 at £12 15s., 1 at £9, 1 at £9 5s., 1 at £7, 1 at £8 15s., 1 at £9, 1 at £7; average, £9 3s. 6d.

ERRATA.

To the Editor of the Herald.

SIR,—I protest—(as the honorable member for ——— says, when he wants to interrupt a telling argument)—I protest against the cruel wrongs done to my article of Monday by one of your compositors. It may have been the normal effect of Christmas beer, or perhaps "pudding always makes him so." But if his errors be not rectified, the injury to my literary prospects will be grievous. For how can I be supposed fit to act as arbiter elegantiarum in all the refinements of PARLIAMENTARY SLANG, if I am incapable of writing intelligible English? I implore you, Sir, in the name of my opus magnum, the forthcoming "Manual," to grant me space for three or four corrections.

In the first paragraph, I am made to speak of a postponement which does not satisfy them. Who are they? I wrote that it did not satisfy me. But this is a joke to what follows five lines further down, where I am made to speak of "Parliamentary interpretation, briefly termed slang." Now, Sir, I am as morbidly sensitive as Mrs Malaprop to an "aspersion on my parts of speech," and I would not have it go forth to the critical world that I used "interpretation" and "slang" as synonyms. I wrote etiquettica. Again, your hackney-coachman galls his jade by "establishing a rose," not a run. Lastly, I am at a loss to conceive how "to omit studied insults" can be "an act of safe malignity." To rest them seems more to the purpose—at all events, that was the word I employed. Pray indulge the susceptibility of an author in posse, by inserting these corrections, and believe me, Sir,

Yours, very grammatically,

LEXILOGUS.

CRICKET.—ILLAWARRA v. SYDNEY WARWICKS.—This long talked-of match was played on Saturday. The morning was dull and betokened rain. Happily, however, it kept off, and there was a day of what may be called, fine cricketing weather. The match was between the Warwicks of Sydney and the Illawarra club. It was agreed, before the wickets were pitched, that the stumps should be drawn at six o'clock in the evening, and that the first innings should decide the game. According to this arrangement the Illawarra men were the victors, and had 13 runs to spare.—Illawarra Express, December 30.
